9. What is the difference between magma and lava?

Figure 1
Diagram of Converging Boundaries
 Convergent plate boundaries occur where two plates move toward each other. One plate may move under another plate, creating a trench. In some situations, an oceanic plate collides beneath a continental plate. This causes the oceanic plate to break, creating magma, which then erupts on the surface as lava.

Converging Boundaries Most converging plate boundaries where oceanic plates meet. Volcanoes may form where an oceanic plate collides with another plate.

Many volcanoes occur where oceanic plates collide. Through subduction, one plate moves beneath another plate, creating a deep ocean trench. Because the magma is less dense than the surrounding rock, it rises toward the surface. Eventually, the magma breaks through the ocean floor, creating volcanoes.

The resulting volcanoes create a string of islands called an island arc. The curve of an island arc follows the curve of its deep-ocean trench. Major island arcs include Japan, New Zealand, Indonesia, the Philippines, the Aleutians, and the Caribbean Islands.

Volcanoes also occur where an oceanic plate is subducted beneath a continental plate. Collisions of this type produced the volcanoes of the Andes Mountains in South America and the volcanoes of the Pacific Northwest in the United States.
