

RELATIVITY AND REALITY

James Tan A.K.

"The sun rises in the East."

"The sun does not rise in the East; the Earth rotates towards the East."

Which of these statements is correct?

Both statements are correct, depending on the reference frame. With respect to people on Earth, i.e., with the observer on Earth as the reference frame, the sun rises in the East. However, with respect to an alien observer (imagine there is a fictitious alien traveling in a spacecraft just outside our solar system), the sun does not rise in the East and the Earth rotates towards the East.

The above example illustrates the fundamental idea in Einstein's Special Theory of Relativity, i.e., displacement, velocity, acceleration, etc., are all relative. When we sit in a café and see a car moving in the North direction, the driver in the car see us moving in the South direction. To an alien observer in the outer space, there is no preferred reference frame, and so both we and the car driver are correct. However, for people on Earth, it will be confusing for communication, etc., if we do not use any agreed reference frame. Hence, we use the Earth as the reference frame in this case, and "the car moving in the North direction" is the generally acceptable "correct" statement – the "Relative Reality".

"Atom comprises electrons, protons and neutrons; proton and neutron are made up of quarks." However, atom and its constituents are so tiny that even the most powerful microscopes cannot visualize a single atom directly. In scientific experiments, indirect methods are used to study atom and the elementary particles. Therefore, the statement "Atom comprises electrons, protons and neutrons; proton and neutron are made up of quarks" is another "Relative Reality" statement – relative to the method of study atom and its elements, and this is an example of "Knowledge is justified true belief".

Scientists have discovered using telescopes that all galaxies, stars, planets, etc. in the universe are moving away from one another. The universe can be analogous to an expanding balloon where the galaxies, stars, planets, etc., are on the surface of the balloon - and hence the distance between any two galaxies, or stars, etc., is always increasing. Again, this is Relative Reality and justified true belief.

A: "The flower is yellow in colour."

B: "Yes, the flower is yellow in colour."

Relative Reality in agreement – A and B learnt how yellow colour looks like since young and that has been stored in their memory systems. They see the same things but are the perceptions in their minds identical? How can anyone prove that?

C: "I like the eclectic design style of the restaurant interior."

D: "I don't like the eclectic design style of the restaurant interior; a retro style is more suitable."

Relative Reality in disagreement – C and D differ in aesthetics taste though they see the same things.

Is it Relativity of Reality or Reality of Relativity, or both? The universe and the world truly depend on how we interpret what we sense.
