Appraiser Inspection Issues and FHA Inspections Drive by Appraisals USDA Your Appraiser and Home Inspectors Who is Managing the Appraisal Process This text discusses the appraisal process and all its facets as they relate to the mortgage industry at large A borrower applying for a loan should know how this may affect them Most would agree it is better to know beforehand if there is going to be problem or at least understand what the reasons are when one arises Most of us will encounter the work of a real estate appraiser at some point in our lives The result could be completely uneventful but problems may arise What happens if the property s appraised value is lower than expected Several things could happen In some cases a buyer will have to renegotiate the contract If a homeowner has applied to refinance their property they may move forward but with a higher interest rate and may have to pay PMI Private Mortgage Insurance In other situations the loan may be denied due to insufficient collateral since the appraised value was lower than expected The appraisal process is complicated certainly expensive and sadly sometimes leads to no result The industry is not perfect and the appraiser has limitations on what they can or cannot do Some limitations may cause borrowers to be frustrated Market practices a lack of data to support any other adjustment and restrictive Lender guidelines are common irritations Then again in some cases we do make mistakes and it would be helpful for the borrower to identify them and have options to find a resolution The average reader should be able to understand an appraisal report at least to the point where it makes sense This text endeavors to help in that process yet in no way pretends to be complete due to the complex nature of the industry and appraisal practices nonetheless most topics are discussed in depth
