

The readers of this book may wonder why the memoirs of a well-known Frenchwoman should make their first appearance in the English language. It is to repair an injustice. When Madame de Chatou let it be known in Paris that she wished to publish her memoirs many publishers, hoping for a succès de scandale, offered to commission them. But, before she had had time to accept one of the offers, all were suddenly and inexplicably withdrawn. Madame de Chatou does not doubt that great pressure was brought to bear by certain people who did not wish such a revealing volume to appear. It was a great disappointment to Madame de Chatou and has greatly saddened her last days; but the present publication, she tells us, has given her the sixth greatest happiness of her life."

—from the Preface

The publishers are proud to give this happiness to Madame de Chatou who has been so generous in giving happiness to others during her long life, which began in a slum building in the Batignoles where her mother was concierge and progressed to that fabulous period of her life when she was Paris herself, her house one of the most beautifully appointed houses in France, her parties notorious for their reckless luxuriance. Friend of Clemenceau, Anatole France, Paul Bourget, Baldini and La Gandara, Madame de Chatou's memoirs cast a light on various aspects of political, literary and social life of her period which are rarely illuminated.
