Class Teaching and Management William Estabrook Chancellor, 1910

Science Teaching in Schools Great Britain: Parliament: House of Lords: Science and Technology Committee, 2006-11-05 The Committee s report examines science and mathematics teaching in secondary schools in England focusing on the following issues the take up of science and mathematics at GCSE and A level the provision of careers advice to students problems in the recruitment and retention of teachers the quality of teaching methods and the role of continuing professional development The Committee finds that effective science teaching in schools is essential both in order to ensure a satisfactory general level of scientific literacy in society and to enable the next generation of scientists and engineers to progress into higher education and beyond It argues that the current examination system forces students to study an excessively narrow range of subjects at too early an age and it recommends that the Government should reconsider the Tomlinson proposals for a broader diploma based system for 14 19 year old students based on the International Baccalaureate This would ensure that students receive a more rounded education and are not made to over specialise before they are able to see the merits of studying science and mathematics Concerns are also raised about the shortage of science teachers particularly specialist physics and chemistry teachers the quality of careers advice in schools and the importance of practical science in schools

The Supply Story Sheila Galloway, Marlene Morrison, 1994 No other book exists on supply teaching in English schools This book is thus an agenda setting volume which uses diverse contributions to provoke discussion of rarely articulated issues which are central to the day to day teaching and learning experiences of both teaching staff and pupils Part 1 considers the individual motives and experience Part 2 the working context and school concerns and Part 3 analyses the role of the local education authority and supply teaching as a labour market phenomenon Against a backcloth of rapid change this edited volume reveals much about these professionals who work daily in schools yet have had little attention paid in previous accounts of schooling As women predominate in the supply teaching force the volume spotlights women teachers experience but recognises the complex gender issues and takes into account the experiences of men working as supply teachers
