

The Urinary System

The urinary system is responsible for filtering waste from the blood, maintaining fluid balance, and regulating blood pressure. It consists of the kidneys, ureters, bladder, and urethra. The kidneys are located in the back of the body, one on each side of the spine. The ureters are tubes that carry urine from the kidneys to the bladder. The bladder is a sac-like organ that stores urine until it is ready to be expelled from the body through the urethra.

Structure of the kidneys

The kidneys are located in the back of the body, one on each side of the spine. They are bean-shaped organs that filter waste from the blood and regulate fluid balance. The kidneys are composed of two main parts: the renal cortex and the renal medulla. The renal cortex is the outer layer of the kidney, and the renal medulla is the inner layer. The renal medulla is divided into several pyramids, each with a base and an apex. The apex of each pyramid points towards the center of the kidney, where the renal pelvis is located. The renal pelvis is a funnel-shaped structure that collects urine from the renal pyramids and carries it to the ureter.

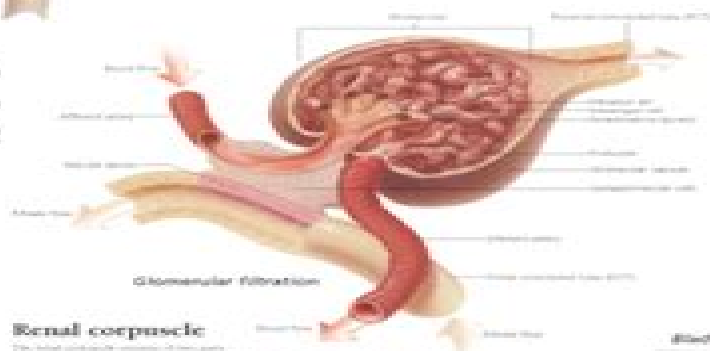

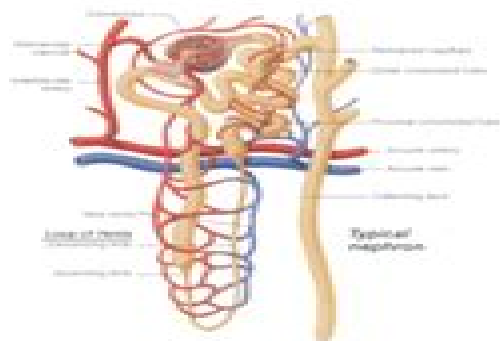

Functions of the kidneys

The kidneys have several functions, including filtering waste from the blood, regulating fluid balance, and producing hormones. They also play a role in maintaining blood pressure and regulating the body's acid-base balance.

The nephron

The nephron is the basic functional unit of the kidney. It is responsible for filtering waste from the blood and regulating fluid balance. Each kidney contains about a million nephrons. The nephron is composed of a renal corpuscle and a renal tubule. The renal corpuscle is located in the renal cortex and consists of a glomerulus and Bowman's capsule. The glomerulus is a cluster of capillaries where blood is filtered. Bowman's capsule is a double-walled structure that surrounds the glomerulus. The renal tubule is a long, coiled tube that carries urine away from the renal corpuscle. It is divided into several segments: the proximal convoluted tubule, the loop of Henle, and the distal convoluted tubule. The distal convoluted tubule eventually empties into a collecting duct.

Renal corpuscle

The renal corpuscle is the part of the nephron where blood is filtered. It consists of a glomerulus and Bowman's capsule. The glomerulus is a cluster of capillaries where blood is filtered. Bowman's capsule is a double-walled structure that surrounds the glomerulus. The renal corpuscle is located in the renal cortex. The glomerulus is a cluster of capillaries where blood is filtered. Bowman's capsule is a double-walled structure that surrounds the glomerulus. The renal corpuscle is located in the renal cortex.

How urine is produced

The kidneys produce about 1.5 liters of urine each day. Urine is produced by the nephrons. Each nephron filters about 120 ml of blood each minute. The filtered fluid is called filtrate. Filtrate is composed of water, electrolytes, and small molecules. Large molecules and cells are not filtered. Filtrate moves through the renal tubule, where it is modified by the addition and removal of water and electrolytes. The modified filtrate is then collected in the collecting duct and carried to the bladder. The bladder stores urine until it is ready to be expelled from the body through the urethra.

- Any stages of urine formation
- 1. Filtration - Filtering of water, waste products, nutrients, glucose, and other chemicals.
- 2. Reabsorption - Reabsorption of useful substances back to the bloodstream.
- 3. Secretion - Secretion of waste materials from capillaries into the renal tubule for removal with the urine.
