Abstract

Teaching and learning of French as a foreign language in any Anglophone country such as Ghana is an extremely difficult task to undertake both on the part of the teacher and the student. This is evidenced in the general low performance of students in the subject at the Basic Education Certificate Examination (BECE) level in both public and private schools over the years. This case study paper follows, examines, and documents evidence (in a day) of an exemplary French teacher, Pangloss who, by dint of hard work, has brought tremendous success to his students. This article critically analyzes the difference and excellence he brings unto the teaching and learning of French even as a part-time teacher in a public Junior High School (JHS) in the Muzumba community within the Cape Zone Metropolis. The paper's pre-occupation is to typically observe the characteristics of this individual foreign language teacher with a view to probing deeply and analyzing intensively the multifarious phenomena that constitute his professional demeanor, the processes he employs in teaching, and the opportunities he creates for student learning purposely to establish some insights on how teaching and learning of French could be made better to the wider French teacher population in Ghana.

Keywords: teaching and learning, escapades, foreign language, Muzumba, Pangloss

Introduction

Ghana is bounded by her French-speaking neighbors: Burkina Faso to the North, Togo to the South and Ivory Coast to the West. With this situation, it has become even more important for every Ghanaian to be literate in the language so as to be able to communicate with people from their neighboring countries. With this premise, it becomes very vital for French to be taught in Ghana as a foreign language. Preparing students for the 21st century cannot be accomplished without a sustaining emphasis on French as a foreign language. Literacy in French not only provides job opportunities internally but it also opens even wider doors for sub-regional integration which is key to national development. Students use French to communicate their thoughts to their neighbors and make connections in new and innovative ways in a way that inures to their benefit. Ghana's education has gone through many reforms dating back to colonial times to date. All these reforms aim at bringing constant improvements in its availability and relevance of education to the citizenry.

The Ministry of Education, with support from the French Embassy, has been promoting and supporting the teaching and learning of French as a foreign language in the country since the 1980s. For instance, the White Paper on Report of the Education Reform Review Committee (Oct 2004) clearly stated the Government of Ghana's intention to ensure that French became a compulsory subject at the Senior High School (SHS) level and that efforts be made to ensure that the Junior High School (JHS) curriculum prepares students to meet this benchmark. The White Paper on the Education Reform Review Committee's findings which became more or less the policy framework on the teaching of French stated among other things that:
