s friend Zoe has found her calling in life turning the old Inn at Willa Bay into the premier wedding venue in the Pacific Northwest. However, she didn't count on the challenge of working closely with her new boyfriend Shawn and her good friend Meg. All of the responsibility for the renovation has fallen on her shoulders, and she doesn't know how everything is going to get done before the Inn's grand opening. Meg knows that Zoe needs more from her, but between working at the Inn part time and her job as a sous chef at a local lodge, she's burning the candle at both ends. Eventually, they'll turn the old barn at the Inn into a restaurant for her to manage, but that's at least six months away. In the meantime, the Inn's tight renovation budget can't afford another full-time salary. For the time being, Meg's life is at a standstill, looking on with envy at the lives of her friends and family. Her sister Libby leads the perfect life, except for the fact that she's been hiding marital problems for a few months and is now at her breaking point. She's watching her friends pursue their passions but feeling stuck in her own life. If her husband doesn't come clean about his secretive behavior and indifference to her, she's going to need to make some serious changes. Although each of the friends is at a different point in their lives, they all must make decisions that will change the shape of their futures and the small town tapestry of Willa Bay.

They camped the first night on a high plateau above the clouds. Having originally settled at nightfall into their individual bedrolls, they were awakened in the middle of the night by a chilling cold. The clouds, which had been situated well below them during the day, had ascended the dark, steep mountain slopes after sundown and now enveloped them. They got up, thoroughly chilled and wet. First Melanie, then Jim, and joined the three Filipinos who were squatted around a blazing fire. Cold, Melanie said, crouching and extending her hands toward the flames. Brr. The fire soon made you warm, the first guide said. Man, it's cold, Jim said as he came up to the fire. What happened? Clouds rise, the tracker said. Tomorrow, the second tracker said, we go into the valley. He pointed toward the steep slope on the side opposite to the way they had come up. It will be easier. Trees do not grow toward the sun but straight out the side of the mountain and farther apart. That's strange, Jim said. This is a strange mountain, the guide said from the story The White Gibbons.
