The Carthaginian Empire Nathan Pilkington, 2019-10-04 The Carthaginian Empire 550-202 BCE argues for a new history of the Phoenician polity In contrast to previous studies of the Carthaginian Empire that privileged evidence from Greco-Roman sources Nathan Pilkington bases his study on evidence preserved in the archaeological and epigraphic records of Carthage and its colonies and dependencies Using this evidence Pilkington demonstrates that the Carthaginian Empire of the 6th-4th centuries BCE as recovered archaeologically and epigraphically bears little resemblance to currently accepted historical reconstructions He then presents an independent archaeological and epigraphic reconstruction of the Carthaginian Empire In this presentation the author argues that the Carthaginian Empire developed later chronologically and was less extensive geographically than reconstructions based on the Greco-Roman source tradition suggest Pilkington further shows that Carthage developed a similar infrastructure of imperial power to those developed in Rome and Athens Like its contemporaries Carthage used colonization the establishment of metropolitan political institutions at dependent polities and the reorganization of trade into a metropolitan hub and spoke system to develop imperial control over subordinated territories

last decade or two has changed our understanding of the Roman era in profound ways and yet despite such encouraging advances and such clear worth there has to date been little in the way of a dedicated forum for the presentation and evaluation of current approaches to the study of material culture The conference at which these papers were initially presented has gone some way to redressing this and these papers bring the very latest studies on Roman finds to a wider audience Twenty papers are here presented covering various themes

Power and Ceremony in European History Anna Kalinowska, Jonathan Spangler, 2021-09-09 From oaths and hand kissing to coronations and baptisms Power and Ceremony in European History considers the governing practices courtly rituals and expressions of power prevalent in Europe and the Ottoman Empire from the medieval age to the modern era Bringing together political and art historical approaches to the study of power this book reveals how ceremonies and rituals far from simply being ostentatious displays of wealth served as a primary means of communication between different participants in political and courtly life It explores how ceremonial culture changed over time and in different regions to provide readers with a nuanced comparative understanding of rituals and ceremonies since the middle ages showing how such performances were integral to the evolution of the state in Europe This collection of essays is of immense value to both historians and art historians interested in representations of power and the political culture of Europe from 1450 onwards
