Congress, 1994 Inside the White House United States. President (1993-2001 : Clinton), 1993 Managing the President's Program Andrew Rudalevige, 2018-06-26 The belief that U S presidents legislative policy formation has centralized over time shifting inexorably out of the executive departments and into the White House is shared by many who have studied the American presidency Andrew Rudalevige argues that such a linear trend is neither at all certain nor necessary for policy promotion In Managing the President's Program he presents a far more complex and interesting picture of the use of presidential staff Drawing on transaction cost theory Rudalevige constructs a framework of contingent centralization to predict when presidents will use White House and or departmental staff resources for policy formulation He backs his assertions through an unprecedented quantitative analysis of a new data set of policy proposals covering almost fifty years of the postwar era from Truman to Clinton Rudalevige finds that presidents are not bound by a relentless compulsion to centralize but follow a more subtle strategy of staff allocation that makes efficient use of limited bargaining resources New items and for example those spanning agency jurisdictions are most likely to be centralized complex items follow a mixed process The availability of expertise outside the White House diminishes centralization However while centralization is a management strategy appropriate for engaging the wider executive branch it can imperil an item's fate in Congress Thus as this well written book makes plain presidential leadership hinges on hard choices as presidents seek to simultaneously manage the executive branch and attain legislative success Public Papers of the Presidents of the United States, William J.
