culture art and anthropology Eating the Ocean Brian Payne,2022-12-02 During the first half of the twentieth century Canadian fisheries regularly produced more fish than markets could absorb driving down profits and wages To address this both industry and government sought to stimulate domestic consumption via increased advertising In Eating the Ocean Brian Payne explores how government funded marketing called upon Canadian housewives to prepare more seafood meals to improve family health and aid an industry central to Canadian identity and heritage The goal was first to make seafood a central element of a wholesome diet as a solution to a perceived nutritional crisis and second to aid industry recovery and growth while decreasing Canadian fisheries dependency on foreign markets But fishery managers and policymakers fundamentally miscalculated consumer demand wrongly assuming that Canadians could and would eat more seafood Fisheries continued to extract more fish than the environment and the market could sustain and the collapse of the nation s fisheries that we are now seeing has as much to do with failed assessments of market demand as it does with faulty extraction practices Using internal communications between industry leaders and Ottawa bureaucrats as well as advertising and promotional material published in the nation s leading magazines national and local newspapers and radio programming Eating the Ocean traces the flawed understanding of not only supply but demand a misguided gamble that caused fisheries to become the most mismanaged resource economy in early twentieth century Canada Readers, Reading, and Librarians

Frey,2015-11-01 Heirloom dishes and family food traditions are rich sources of nostalgia and provide vivid ways to learn about our families past yet they can be problematic Many family recipes and food traditions are never documented in written or photographic form existing only as unwritten know how and lore that vanishes when a cook dies Even when recipes are written down they often fail to give the tricks and tips that would allow another cook to accurately
