nothing so much as an armed truce peaceable and allowing both to pursue their several paths and finally dissolved by mutual consent in 1598 when Queen Marguerite was forty five The closing years of her life were spent in strict seclusion at the Castle of Usson in Auvergne and it was at this time that she probably wrote her Memoirs In the original the Memoirs are written in a clear vigorous French and in epistolary form Their first editor divided them into three sections or books As a whole they cover the secret history of the Court of France from the years 1565 to 1582 seventeen years of extraordinary interest comprising as they do the Massacre of St Bartholomew already referred to the formation of the famous League the Peace of Sens and the bitter religious persecutions which were at last ended by the Edict of Nantes issued after Henry of Navarre became Henry IV of France Besides the political bearing of the letters they give a picturesque account of Court life at the end of the 16th century the fashions and manners of the time piquant descriptions and amusing gossip such as only a witty woman as Marguerite certainly was could inject into such subjects The letters indeed abound in sprightly anecdote and small talk which yet have their value in lightening up the whole situation The period covered coincides very nearly with the first half of Marguerite s own life Incidents of her girlhood are given leading to more important matters personal and political up to the twenty ninth year of her age The letters end therefore some seven years prior to the death of her brother Henry III of France and while she was still merely Queen of Navarre It will always be a matter of regret that the latter half of her life was not likewise covered
