Service Of Clouds:

The Service of Clouds Delia Falconer, 1997 The year the Hydro Majestic Hotel failed as a hydropathic institute Harry Kitchings fell in love with the air and stayed Les Curtain began to feel the dusk in his lungs It was a romantic year Men carried thermometers and dreamed of women struck by lightning Postmen hauled packets filled with love and human hair Women carried notebooks and pressed storms in them like flowers You could feel our love rising from the mountaintops At least that is how Harry Kitchings might tell it What were we in love with It is 1907 and the Blue Mountains are filled with the grand dreams of elsewhere Eureka Jones a young pharmacist s assistant with historical eyes falls in love with Harry Kitchings a man who takes pictures of clouds and succumbs to the madness of photography Their love turns the mountains sapphire blue Set in a vast landscape haunted by sadness and the stories of romance which drift across it The Service of Clouds combines the lushness of Marquez and the tenderness of Ondaatje to explore passion illness and the secret desires men and women bring to mountains What the critics said The introduction of photography into the Australian Blue Mountains is an unlikely subject for a debut novel Reading it is like watching a picture slowly emerge in a developing tank But what a picture and what a writer Economist Review an exuberant meditation on the history of the air the art of seeing and the end of romance as the pre moderns knew it New York Times Book Review a delight to read but I feel that it will become an even richer work as I sit with it and absorb its layers and its grace Australian Book Review theme and metaphor dovetail seamlessly shaped as they are by Falconer s poetic vision It is such a joy to read a novelist who writes with all the precision and exuberance of a poet Sydney Morning Herald
