were spent in Caledonia years which formed Anderson's earliest memories. This period later inspired his semi-autobiographical novel Tar A Midwest Childhood (1926). In Caledonia, Anderson's father began drinking excessively, which led to financial difficulties, eventually causing the family to leave the town. With each move, Irwin Anderson's prospects dimmed. While in Camden, he was the proprietor of a successful shop and could employ an assistant. By the time the Andersons finally settled down in Clyde, Ohio, in 1884, a frontier town, Irwin could only get work as a hired man to harness manufacturers. That job was short-lived, and for the rest of Sherwood Anderson's childhood, his father barely supported the family as an occasional sign painter and paperhanger, while his mother took in washing to make ends meet. Partly as a result of these misfortunes, young Sherwood became adept at finding various odd jobs to help his family, earning the nickname "Jobby." Though he was a decent student, Anderson's attendance at school declined as he began picking up work, and he finally left school for good at age 14, after about nine months of high school. From the time he began to cut school to the time he left town, Anderson worked as a newsboy, errand boy, waterboy, cow driver, stable groom, and perhaps printer's devil, not to mention assistant to Irwin Anderson, Sign Painter, in addition to assembling bicycles for the Elmore Manufacturing Company. Even in his teens, Anderson's talent for selling was evident, a talent he would later draw on in a successful career in advertising. As a newsboy, he was said to have convinced a tired farmer in a saloon to buy two copies of the same evening paper. With the exception of work, Anderson's childhood resembled that of other boys his age.
