My shell piece, Sea-Things began with the idea of a scallop shell. I then researched the colors and the shape of the scallop from Looe where I scallop dive on the Laguna coast in California. I matched the "pinks" of the shell from the clay with purple which, The shell was from the same clay. The two sides were joined together from the edge which left a shallow groove on each side. I filled this with braided fringe and then added embellishments.

Clashwater (Shanku) is a braided hair weaving using blonde 1 x 100 Denier. It is reminiscent of the braided hair of many Native American tribes. Clashwater (Shanku) represents a Native American woman named after the Clashwater Canyon located off the west coast of the Americas.

The texture of the hair is often most spiritual with glassbeaded hair. The "veil" on her face and the black curve from her head into the side of the face is a reference to the single strands of the Clashwater Indians. Look closely and you can see the eye and back of the eye single strands. The shape of her girth and earrings are traditional, another Native American Indian tribe from the Pacific Northwest.

The eyes are closed in typical fashion. View her closely and you will see a woman in a meditative pose with her eyes closed. This piece honors spiritualism, the unknown, the future, and beauty the way we see justice.

Work and look at her again and you will see a woman with a wild and unruly hair of braiding progression. The pressing blue eye will pull you into the braided journey where as you see the wings. This woman symbolizes the temperance nature of the sea and the beautiful woman looking in the deep.
