Congress. House. Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. Subcommittee on Health and the Environment, 1979 Assessment of Environmental Radioactivity and Radiation for Human Health Risk Shinji Tokonami, Ikuo Kashiwakura, 2021-09-15 Ten years have passed since the nuclear accident occurred in Fukushima Japan following the Great East Japan earthquake Thereafter many people around the world have been concerned about the risks posed by radiation They still believe that even a small amount of radiation exposure will affect human health In reality however there are many natural radionuclides in the environment which emit a variety of types of radiation Although it is well known that there is a positively linear relationship between acute radiation exposure and cancer risk in atomic bomb survivors the risk of chronic radiation exposure due to natural radionuclides cannot be well explained to people who have lived in high background radiation areas for many generations Therefore more studies in this research field are required to obtain new scientific findings In order to promote further scientific activities it will be the best for us to understand the current status of this field by summarizing what we have apprehended so far This Special Issue will highlight measurement data methodologies radiation biology and risk assessment related to radiation Effect of Radiation on Human Health United States. Congress. House. Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. Subcommittee on Health and the Environment, 1979 Climate Vulnerability , 2013-03-15 Climate change has been the subject of thousands of books and magazines scientific journals and newspaper articles daily It is a subject that can be very political and emotional often blurring the lines between fact and fiction The vast majority of research studies projections and recommendations tend to focus on the human influence on climate change and global warming as the result of CO2 emissions often to the exclusion of other threats that include population growth and the stress placed on energy sources due to emerging global affluence Climate Vulnerability Five Volume Set seeks to strip away the politics and emotion that surround climate change and will assess the broad range of threats using the bottom up approach including CO2 emissions population growth emerging affluence and many others to our five most critical resources water food ecosystems energy and human health Inclusively determining what these threats are while seeking preventive measures and adaptations is at the heart of this unique reference work Takes a Bottom Up approach addressing climate change and the threat to our key resources at the local level first and globally second providing a more accurate and inclusive approach Includes extensive cross referencing which is key to readers as new connections between factors can be discovered Cuts across a number of disciplines and will appeal to Biological Science Earth Environmental Science Ecology and Social Science comprehensively addressing climate change and other threats to our key resources from multiple perspectives
