Abstract

Predominately White institutions of higher education have focused a considerable amount of attention on the underrepresentation of African American and other ethnically diverse students in colleges and universities. To address this problem, colleges and universities have focused not just on recruitment but also on the retention of African American students in these predominately White institutions. They have recognized that efforts to address underrepresentation cannot be limited to recruitment efforts; they must also consider factors associated with retention in the underrepresentation equation. We contend that gifted education embodies many of the same attributes, challenges, and barriers that predominately White colleges and universities possess for African American students. We recognize that, in public school systems, educators—teachers, school counselors, and administrators—have made much progress in recruiting culturally diverse populations in gifted programs. Despite the efforts, too many African American students are not being retained in gifted education programs. Using Sedlacek's non-cognitive variables (1987, 1989, 1991, 1994, 1996, 1998), we examine the notion of retention and its many implications for gifted education. Thus, we offer, using these variables, recommendations for improving the retention of African American students in gifted education.

A persistent problem in public schools is the underrepresentation of African American students in gifted education and enrichment programs. Each year, many public school systems, around the country, expend substantial resources and funds to attract these students to gifted education programs. These efforts have led educators—teachers, school counselors, and administrators—to use a variety of approaches (i.e., referral, screening, assessment, and placement) to increase the representation of African American students and other students of color in gifted education.

In 1994, Ford postulated that the representation of African American students can only improve when educational professionals (i.e., teachers, school counselors, administrators, etc.) begin to focus more on "recruitment and retention." Furthermore, Ford advocated that educators go beyond the notion of "recruitment"—finding and placing students in gifted education. She further advised educators: (a) to find effective measures, strategies, policies and procedures to better recruit diverse students; (b) to find more effective and inclusive ways of retaining these students in gifted programs once recruited; and (c) to collect data on factors affecting both the recruitment and retention of diverse students in gifted education in order to more fully understand the underrepresentation problem.

In the research literature, there is a dearth of articles, book chapters, books, and monographs that focus on the "retention" of African American students in gifted education. A disproportionate of the literature focuses on retention (Moore, Ford, & Milner, 2005b). The primary "culprit" for African American students' underrepresentation has been attributed to recruitment issues, usually associated with testing. In other words, the vast majority of research and scholarship on gifted education suggest that poor test performance is the most salient reason why African American and other

Building on Resilience Fred A. Bonner II, 2023-07-03 How do we fix the leaky educational pipeline into a conduit of success for Black males That the issue is critical is demonstrated by the statistics that only 10% of Black males in the United States are proficient in 8th grade reading only 52% graduate from high school within four years and only 35 percent graduate from college This book uniquely examines the trajectory of Black males through the educational pipeline from pre school through college In doing so it not only contributes significantly to the scholarship on the experiences of this population but bridges the gap between theory and practice to provide frameworks and models that will improve these young men s educational outcomes throughout their educational journeys A compelling feature of the book is that it does not treat Black males as homogeneous but recognizes the diversity that exists among Black males in various educational settings It demonstrates the need to recognize students intersectionalities and individual characteristics as an essential preliminary to developing practices to improve outcomes at every educational stage Throughout the contributing authors also focus on the strategies and experiences of Black males who achieve academic excellence examining growth producing and asset based practices that can be sustained and that build upon the recognition that these males have agency and possess qualities such as resilience that are essential to their learning and development The frameworks and models that conclude each chapter are equally commendable to K 12 educators and administrators higher education faculty student affairs practitioners and administrators and policymakers for whom templates are provided for rectifying the continuing inequities of our educational system

Families, Risk, and Competence Michael Lewis, Candice Feiring, 2014-04-04 The problems of studying families arise from the difficulty in studying systems where there are multiple elements interacting with each other and with the child How should this system be described Still other problems relate to indirect effects namely the influence of a particular dyad s interaction on the child when the child is not a member of the dyad While all agree that the mother father relationship has important bearing on the child s development exactly how to study this especially using observational techniques remains a problem While progress in studying the family has been slow there is no question that an increase in interest in the family systems as opposed to the mother child relationship is taking place This has resulted in an increase in research on families and their effects This volume by leading figures in child development on families attests to the growing sophistication of the conceptualization and measurement techniques for getting at family processes The third in a series that aims to address topics relevant to the developmental problems and developmental disabilities of retardation this volume is divided into two parts Section 1 presents basic family processes and approaches for describing family dynamics It deals with these issues from a broad perspective including studying families at dinner families in different cultural contexts and the understanding of family in nonhuman primates Section 2 looks at family processes in the service of studying families at risk The risk factors include poverty malnutrition and developmental delay and retardation The study of family processes in these contexts provides data on family dynamics as well as how these dynamics impact on the children s developing competence This volume will be informative for researchers clinicians and educators from a variety of disciplines and settings The editors aim is to bring a greater clarity to issues concerning the family life of children and highlight new research and possibilities for intervention

Finding John Galt Elizabeth Romey,2013-08-01 This volume covers significant highlights in the history of gifted education addressing significant contributors to the field important political and policy concerns and programs and practices of note The book s scope is holistic using Ayn Rand s concept of men and women of the mind to frame giftedness as a quality of individuals that extends beyond the academic or schoolhouse setting and into a range of aspects of the lived human experience of gifted individuals
