

Of Time and the River

Legend of Man's Hunger in His Youth

by Thomas Wolfe

author of
LOOK HOMeward, ANGEL

In this novel Thomas Wolfe recalls the youth of Samson Lewis in the North Piedmont mountains north of Asheville, North Carolina. Lewis said that "he may have chosen to be the greatest American writer . . . in fact I don't see why he should not be one of the greatest world writers." And Thomas Wolfe's new novel, like "Look Homeward, Angel" is, he writes Samson Lewis again, "in days and spaces that I share with the whole of life."

It is an epic of the quest and pilgrimage of youth, specifically of an American, but essentially of the young man in all lands and ages. This pilgrimage begins in Asheville, the heart of the mountains, and takes him through a great variety of adventures in Europe, the East, the West, and New York, through the cities of the world, the mountains of Europe, from which he returns to America, inevitably drawn back to the great, repeating continent he had had in his memory and dream.

For those who desire the dramatic of prose and background, variety of thought, and a character, the theme, great youth living and passionately moving through the world, with the love and passion of a great epic, this is a novel of the world of the future which is in the world of the present. It is a story of the world of the future which is in the world of the present. It is a story of the world of the future which is in the world of the present. It is a story of the world of the future which is in the world of the present.
