The Oxford Illustrated History of New Zealand

Edited by Keith Sinclair
Second edition

The history of the country we now call New Zealand spans more than a thousand years. It was discovered by Polynesian voyagers and was 'rediscovered' by Tasman in 1642 and Cook in 1769. By 1839 there were about 2000 settlers and between 100 000 and 200 000 Maori.

The signing of the Treaty of Waitangi in 1840 ushered in a period of colonization and settlement. The years that followed saw momentous events: the wars of the 1860s between the Maori and the British army; the beginning of party government in the 1890s; votes for women in 1893; fighting in wars in South Africa and Europe, the Great Depression, the drift to towns by the Maori, the influx of Pacific Islanders, and the economic reforms of the fourth Labour Government of the 1980s.

This book brings a thousand years of history to life, and a new chapter about the 1990s brings this second edition right up to date. Each chapter has been written by an expert in their field, drawing on the most recent research. Scrupulous attention has been paid to the history of both the Maori and the European.

The pictures illustrate the lives of ordinary people as well as prominent people. The resulting book is an accessible history for general readers and an essential resource for every New Zealand home.

Sir Keith Sinclair wrote nearly thirty books, including poetry and fiction. For fifty years he was a leading light in academic and literary circles. Known as the 'father of New Zealand history', Sir Keith was knighted in 1988 for his services to history. He died in June 1993.
