

In today's society, a strong message is sent to women about the importance of physical appearance (Henderson-King & Henderson-King, 1997). These societal pressures result in women placing an inordinate amount of importance on body image (Van Der Velden, 1985). As a result, it is hypothesized that body image contributes to more comprehensive quality of life attitudes, such as happiness, in American women. Of particular interest for the present study is not only whether women's personal happiness is associated with body image, but if these relationships remain consistent across the life span.

BODY IMAGE

Body image and its correlates have received mounting attention in both the fields of psychology and sociology. Body image is a multidimensional self-attitude toward the size, shape, and aesthetic of one's body (Cash & Pruzinsky, 1990). Body image consists of two components. First is a physical component, which represents a given bodily feature or movement (i.e., thighs, cheeks, physical stamina, etc.). Second, there is a psychological meaning which reflects a feeling, thought, or personal quality expressed by each particular bodily feature or action (i.e., what one thinks or feels about his/her thighs, cheeks, physical stamina, etc.) (Van Der Velden, 1985). If the physical component of the body is seen in a negative manner, then the psychological meaning will in turn be negative in nature (and vice versa). Not only do we see ourselves in relation to this self-formed body image, but we also form body images for those around us. Recognition of other's appearances and actions are categorized into certain images we have formed for them (i.e., she has a pretty face, he is very athletic, etc.). Consequently, these body images we have created for others change as we perceive differences in the individual (Van Der Velden, 1985). A comparison between our own body image and the body images of others, begins the contest within ourselves to not only fit in, but also to comply with our society's ideal of perfection in order to be happy. Discontentment with one's own body and striving to attain the "ideal" body image dictated by those we esteem as society's elite, is the insidious situation in which women commonly find themselves entangled.

Negative feelings, thoughts, or personal qualities related to one's body would indicate a disturbance of body image and lead to dissatisfaction with one's self. Disturbances in body image have been linked to eating disorders, such as anorexia nervosa and bulimia nervosa (Garner & Garfinkel, 1980). Not only have disturbances been linked to eating disorders, but also to a variety of problems, including lowered self-esteem, depression, marital satisfaction, and motivation (Mintz &
