Building the Reading Brain, PreK-3 Pat Wolfe, Pamela Nevills, 2004-04-19 The brain is hard wired for spoken language but not for reading Yet reading skills serve as the primary foundation of all school based learning and research indicates that a student s future academic success can be predicted by his or her reading level at the end of third grade With this latest resource authors Patricia Wolfe and Pamela Nevills provide insight and assistance for preschool teachers parents and care providers and nursery and primary teachers by explaining the development of the young brain the acquisition of language as preparation for reading and the nurturing and instruction process from birth to age eight This unique guide demonstrates how the brain of a child masters the reading process of decoding print and reading with fluency and comprehension and addresses related literacy skills of writing and spelling Brain friendly strategies that lay the groundwork for reading success include activities to support phonemic awareness phonics vocabulary comprehension and fluency applications of games music play and instruction intervention suggestions for children who are challenged or discouraged early readers

Frontiers in the Acquisition of Literacy Claire M.

Fletcher-Flinn,2015-09-28 Learning to read and to spell are two of the most important cultural skills that must be acquired by children and for that matter anyone learning a second language We are not born with an innate ability to read A reading system of mental representations that enables us to read must be formed in the brain Learning to read in alphabetic orthographies is the acquisition of such a system which links mental representations of visual symbols letters in print words with pre existing phonological sound and semantic comprehension cognitive systems for language Although spelling draws on the same representational knowledge base and is usually correlated with reading the acquisition processes involved are not quite the same Spelling requires the sequential production of letters in words and at beginning levels there may not be a full degree of integration of phonology with its representation by the orthography Reading on the other hand requires only the recognition of a word for pronunciation Hence spelling is more difficult than reading and learning to spell may necessitate more complete representations or more conscious access to them The learning processes that children use to acquire such cognitive systems in the brain and whether these same processes are universal across different languages and orthographies are central theoretical questions Most children learn to read and spell their language at the same time thus the co ordination of these two facets of literacy acquisition needs explication as well as the effect of different teaching approaches on acquisition Lack of progress in either reading and or spelling is also a major issue of concern for parents and teachers necessitating a cross disciplinary approach to the problem encompassing major efforts from researchers in neuroscience cognitive science experimental psychology and education The purpose of this Research Topic is to summarize and review what has been accomplished so far and to further explore these general issues Contributions from different perspectives are welcomed and could include theoretical computational and empirical works that focus on the acquisition of literacy including cross orthographic research

Childhood in the Middle Ages and the Renaissance Albrecht Classen,2011-12-22 Earlier theses on the history of childhood can now be laid to rest and a fundamental paradigm shift initiated as there is an overwhelming body of evidence to show that in medieval and early modern times too there were close emotional relations between parents and children The contributors to this volume demonstrate conclusively on the one hand how intensively parents concerned themselves with their children in the pre modern era and on the other which social political and religious conditions shaped these relationships These studies in emotional history demonstrate how easy it is for a subjective choice of sources coupled with faulty interpretations caused mainly by modern prejudices toward the Middle Ages in particular to lead to the view that in the past children were regarded as small adults The contributors demonstrate convincingly that intense feelings admittedly often different in nature shaped the relationship between adults and children
