An Artist in Venice Adam Van Doren, 2013 The city of Venice has always provided an almost irresistible lure for both writers and artists Henry James loved it as did Ruskin Browning Pound and Brodsky For artists it has been a compulsory magnet since the time of Bellini and Canaletto By the nineteenth century there was hardly an artist of note Whistler and Turner Sargent and Prendergast Sickert and Bonington who was not seduced by the city's charms history and aesthetic heritage For the depiction of Venice by artists it's a high bar that's been set but Adam Van Doren grandson of the Pulitzer prize winning poet Mark Van Doren convincingly confronts the competition in this charming memoir a verbal and visual account of his love affair with the city His story is personal like all other artists he sees the city with and through his own eyes but he is also well informed historically He laces his tour with information opinion and citation With Van Doren as guide the reader's tour of the city is rich and convincing filled with the presence of illustrious predecessors With an informed preface by the scholar Theodore Rabb and a charming foreword by Simon Winchester with 21 full color drawings by the author artist and even six pages of commendably lucid Notes on the personalities and structures discussed this is a book that will proudly take its place alongside the many others that have celebrated this city for centuries Publisher description
