Functional Linguistic and Sociological Perspectives Frances Christie,Karl Maton,2011-02-03 Disciplinary knowledge is under threat in the modern world Claims abound that we are entering a landscape in which the division of disciplines is obsolete implying a commitment to outdated values in scholarship Notions of discipline are critiqued as reflecting social power and representing the worldview of dominant social groups By addressing and challenging such claims this edited collection argues that proclamations of the death of disciplines have been greatly overstated Not only are the notions of disciplinarity still important for understanding how we come to know the world but this volume demonstrates how significant

disciplinarity is to understanding different forms of knowledge if we wish to improve the building of knowledge and educational practice Using analytical tools from systemic functional linguistics theory and social realist sociology this volume illustrates how different disciplines can collaborate and cross fertilize successfully without losing their distinctive insights and disciplinary integrity The subsequent theory developed will thereby extend both linguistic and sociological approaches to the topic and make a major contribution to educational theory

Object Representation and Matching Based on Skeletons and Curves Christian Feinen,2016-05-31 This thesis is dedicated to the problem of object recognition in the three dimensional space Instead of using exclusively the information typically transported by a two dimensional image the concept of this work additionally incorporates the third dimension namely the depth The depth data itself is captured by sensors capable of measuring the distance from the device s position to those objects residing inside its field of view The actual recognition process is implemented in analogy to the Path Similarity Skeleton Graph Matching PSSGM Basically this method represents a 2D object by its skeleton and uses the idea of shortest paths to describe it Finally the similarity between two objects is calculated based on the Hungarian method The contribution of the current work maps this approach into the three dimensional space and applies it to 3D objects While one of the experiments aims at the recognition of 3D chairs and tables another one is devoted to the registration of fully segmented vascular structures Excellent and promising recognition results are achieved in challenging evaluation setups showing that the 3D version of the PSSGM has the potential to solve complex recognition tasks
