Abstract

Background: Randomised controlled trials are the gold standard for evaluating mental health care interventions. We assessed the content and quality of trials published in Acta Psychiatrica Scandinavica and Supplementum since 1948.

Methods: All trials were identified manually, quality assessed, data extracted, and sought on Medline.

Results: About 8.6% of all reports in the journal were clinical trials ($n = 582$) with the peak frequency in the 1980s. Most originate from Europe (80%) and focus on depression (~38%) or schizophrenia (27%). The median sample size is 44. We found only two trials that fully met the criteria of quality reporting RCTs set by CONSORT statements (0.34%) since 1996. Less than 50% of records were possible to identify by a Medline search using broad methodological terms.

Conclusion: Acta is a major source of health trials. The standard of reporting is similar to other journals but better adherence to CONSORT would ensure higher quality of reports and better dissemination.

Background

Randomised trials are now widely accepted as the "gold standard" for providing evidence on the effectiveness of health care interventions in general [1] as well as mental health care interventions in particular [2]. Random assignment greatly reduces the potential for bias in the allocation of interventions. It ensures that comparison groups are as similar as possible to each other in terms of both known and unknown possible predictors of treatment response [3]. Empirical evidence suggests that non-randomised studies tend to overestimate the effects of healthcare [4]. In addition, the extent and the direction of bias in these studies is often impossible to predict [5].

The use of randomised trials was largely restricted to evaluations of new drug therapies, either against an existing standard agent or against a placebo control. More recently, however, randomised controlled trials are being used to evaluate a much broader range of interventions [6].

Poorly conducted randomised trials, however, can provide biased results [7]. For example, allocation concealment, blinding, intention-to-treat analysis, and loss to follow-up are the critical items in the design and conduct of randomised trials, and an inadequately conceived, conducted and reported randomised trial may overestimate

Schizophrenia Bulletin ,1984 Depression in Schizophrenics Richard Williams,J. Thomas Dalby,2013-06-29 The chapters of this volume were originally presented at a symposium on Depression in Schizophrenics held at the University of Calgary Health Sciences Centre on July 06 and 07 1988 It was the intent of the organizers to draw together leading international researchers to address in a comprehensive fashion the persisting problem of depression in schizophrenic individuals As many of the authors point out depression was clearly identified as a central problem in schizophrenia by the pioneers of psychiatry Their wisdom and clinical acumen was lost for a time to be only recently re discovered Their insights must now be integrated with modern taxonomic systems evolving etiological models and methods of assessment With increased recognition of the problem of depression in this population we must also examine appropriate methods of ameliorating the suffering of those afflicted The conference was divided into sections theoretical aspects phenomenology suicide and treatment and the chairmen of these sections have given brief introductions Necessary overlap of topics and methods provided a convergent and validating examination of empirical results which may serve to direct continuing studies As well we hope that thoughtful review may directly influence clinical practice and thereby improve the quality of life for schizophrenic patients Current Themes in Psychiatry in Theory and Practice N.
