School Governing Bodies:

School Governing Bodies Peter Earley, Michael Creese, 1998 Governing bodies have statutory responsibilities for many important functions within schools As successive Education Acts have developed governors roles and responsibilities educational researchers and policy makers have shown a growing interest in them In this paper the authors examine the research literature to focus on the roles of school governing bodies particularly their contribution to the raising of standards and in ensuring a school s effectiveness and continuing improvement The review starts with a brief outline of the legislative framework within which governing bodies operate and the rationale for their existence The more significant research studies into governance are considered and the paper concludes with a discussion of the governing body s role in relation to school effectiveness and school improvement School Governing Bodies Maurice Kogan, 1984 Lessons in Teamwork Audit Commission for Local Authorities and the National Health Service in England and Wales, 1995 National Association of School Governing Bodies National Association of School Governing Bodies (South Africa), 2005 School Governing Bodies in the English Education System Paul R. The Role of School Governing Bodies Great Britain. Parliament. House of Commons. Education Committee, Great Britain. Parliament. House of Commons, 2013-07-01 Greater freedoms for schools means they need to have more effective governing bodies At the moment the quality of governance in many schools is inadequate Accordingly the Committee recommends a series of measures to boost governors performance These include introducing professional clerks whose status should be similar to a company secretary and provide professional support They also want to see greater training for governors schools should be required to offer this to every new governor Crucially people from all walks of life to should be encouraged to contribute as school governors The Government should review the current incentives for and requirements on businesses that release their staff for governor duties Payment for governors is not necessary but there may be a case to consider remuneration in some cases The Department for Education should play its part by explaining what models of school governance are now possible under the new regulations They need to show how new arrangements can improve the ability of governing bodies to deliver their vital role to provide effective school leadership Academies already have more freedom in how they constitute their governing bodies and although not all academy governance is excellent the Government should actively seek to learn lessons from the best approaches developed under these flexibilities in order to demonstrate what works best in the interests of pupils Ofsted s increased focus on school governance is also a welcome development
