Description :

This volume on camping was published in 1882. From the book's Preface The camper has of late years occupied a distinctive position by the side of the hunter, the angler and the canoeist. Each summer adds to the number of those who, without being expert in the arts of the sportsman, go out for the mere pleasure of camping. Even ladies and children penetrate the depths of our forests, share in the genial glow of the camp-fire, and enhance the pleasure of a woodland life by their presence. The lover of nature, the artist, the sportsman and the naturalist, each find occupation, amusement and rest. The aim in writing this little work has been to give concisely some practical hints sufficient for guidance, which can be acted upon according to the length of the purse and the degree of one's enthusiasm. Whether the reader's tent be pitched upon the seashore, beside a mountain brook, or upon the rolling prairie, it is hoped that something may be found in the following pages which will add to his comfort and his pleasure. For the kindness of authors and publishers in allowing extracts to be taken from their works, for which credit will be found elsewhere, thanks are due.
