Browning's influential use of practical reason for his fundamental practical theology is analysed. His correlation of theory and practice in his three stages of theory, practice and theory is also critiqued because his approach reduces practical theology almost to professionalism and principles for ministry. His approach could also result in an antagonistic relationship between practice and theory as practice is reduced to theory or academics. This article seeks to present a critically engaged practical reasoning approach in which theory and practice have an in-ter-dependent relationship. Practical reason is an activity in which engagement happens at every stage. For this to happen, theory and practice interact as equal variables that have a bearing on each other not to reduce the one to the other, but to complement each other in a lateral hermeneutical process. This process has four stages, unlike Browning's three-stage correlation. The stages are schematically presented as practice, theory, practice and theory.

Introduction

Since the mid-eighties practical theology has attracted renewed interest from both theology and other sciences. Not only did practical theology become important for the church to interpret the increasing gap between modernity and post-modernity or between universalism and particularity, the gap between the autonomous individual and the communitarian persons, but also how rationality is used in practical theology. Rationality or more specifically abstract reasoning as meta-narrative has now lost its hold on both the sciences and theology. This article seeks to analyse and criticise Browning's approach of practical theology in light of its use of practical reason. In doing this I attempt to point out the significance of Browning's critical correlational approach to practical theology's renewed importance in post-modernity. Browning's approach is a starting point for developing my own model of practical theology which adds another dimension to Browning's approach.

Some of the most influential attempts by practical theologians to relate the church and the world have been the two distinct paradigms (Osmer 2011) and the foundational and postfoundational (Muller 2011) methods. Browning's approach is an attempt to relate theory and practice to the interaction of practical theology with the church and society by using practical reason. The correlation of theory and practice refers to the emergence of the importance of theory and practice and is presented as an interrelated relationship of practice, theory and practice.

Whilst Browning's critical correlational approach to practical theology forms the basis for some of the most influential approaches and scholars, this article will point out in which way reasoning in practical theology has been reduced to professionalism and principles for ministry in the church and the world. This way of using practical reason has also resulted in theory and practice having an antagonistic relationship because practice has been reduced to theory or intellectualism.

This article seeks to present a critically engaged practical reasoning approach to practical theology in which theory and practice have an in-ter-dependent relationship. Practical reason is an activity in which engagement happens at every stage. For this to happen, theory and practice interact as equal variables that have a bearing on each other, not to reduce the one or the other, but to complement each other in a lateral hermeneutical process. This process has four stages, unlike Browning's three-stage correlation. The stages are schematically presented as practice, theory, practice and theory with a reasonable 'distance' between each stage.

After an analysis and critique of Browning's approach I will present a critically engaged approach as a four-stage process for practical theology. In this approach both the practical and theoretical elements of practical theology are maintained, but each stage in the process is distinct, yet part of the whole, which makes them in-ter-dependent.

Practice, theory and practice

The approach of Browning will be discussed under the characteristics of being interdisciplinary, with the emphasis on practice, its inclusive task of church and world, and the role of ethics.

economics and philosophy The content and authority of the Christian tradition is being challenged by the blurred encounters with more fluid lifestyles alternative spiritualities and indeed other faiths as mediated through information technology and the breakdown of attachments to all forms of institutional life Traditional ways of belonging and relating to places and structures are being eroded leaving the established patterns of ministry worship church organisation the province of an ageing population while those who are now more inclined to search for communities of interest avoid being drawn into the practices and structures of formal religion What is the future for practical theology in this rapidly changing context By examining the familiar concerns of the subject John Reader shows how it is in danger of operating with zombie categories still alive but only just and presents the possibilities for a reflexive spirituality grounded in the Christian tradition as a way into the future

Sermon Listening Enoch Šeba, 2021-06-30 Preaching is an integral part of every church service and its purpose has always been to edify encourage and to emphasize the positive effects of coming together as a people of God Yet there remains an inconsistency between the intended goals of preaching and the subjective perception of the listeners In this homiletical study Dr Enoch Šeba provides fresh insight into the turn to the listener model and offers a theologically sustainable warrant mandate for the transformation of the preaching practice through a stronger involvement of the congregation While grounding the research in the experience of Croatian Baptists Dr Šeba highlights practical suggestions for both listeners and preachers that are transferrable across contexts This important work reveals that preaching can and should be transformed into a truly congregational practice that will affirmatively affect the dynamics of ecclesial life This book will spark conversations and induce small scale changes on a variety of levels while bridging the gap between preachers and their listeners

Practical Theology and Qualitative Research - second edition John Swinton, Harriet Mowat, 2016-10-30 Practical Theology is a growing discipline in its own right and the latest thinking in practical theology of how to use theological learning in practical situations is fully explored in this new edition of an established textbook The authors examine methodologies of the social sciences and questions how they can enable the task of theological reflection examine the relationship between qualitative and quantitative methods and highlight the significance of both for the task of practical theology They also take the reader through the actual process of developing and carrying out a research project using the author's own research as case study examples Previous case studies include the rise in spirituality the decline in church attendance evidence based medicine compared to needs led assessments the growth in chaplaincy and how it is understood as separate from parish ministry In this second edition case studies and all bibliographies have been updated plus a new chapter has been added

Christian Education and the Emerging Church
Rev. Dr. Wendi Sargeant, 2015-07-24 All signs point to Christian education having lost its theological location and prominence in the life of the Western Protestant church The Emerging Church movement as an intentionally postmodern approach to ministry in the contemporary context may however offer insights to reinterpret Christian education This significant movement in today's church gives Christian education a new interpretive framework that is theologically located at an intersection of doxology and doctrine In her examination of postmodern faith formation Wendi Sargeant explores the importance of the Christian worshipping community as the most appropriate setting for Christian education Practitioners and students will benefit from the ready to use teaching and learning matrix and all those with interest in the formation of faith in themselves and others will draw much from the way Sargeant situates worship as the basis for enhancing Christian formation and ethos

New Approaches to Human Dignity in the Context of Qur'ānic Anthropology Rüdiger Braun, Hüseyin I.

Cicek,2017-05-11 In recent years the challenge of relating one's own theological concept of man and his destiny to secular topics such as the inviolability of human dignity has generated a dynamic discourse about how Islamic anthropology can help cultivate and perfect the individual self and social humanisation. This anthology brings together contemporary Muslim and non-Muslim approaches to the secular notion of human dignity with reference to the Islamic tradition in general and the anthropology of the Qur'an in particular. The collection presents approaches to Islamic theological anthropology across a range of fields especially with regard to the narrative of Adam and Iblis which occurs in all monotheistic traditions. It focuses on the specific grammars of anthropological narratives at the levels of the canonical text of the Qur'an itself, Section I, and the interpretations that focus on its performative discourse, Section II. Further to this, the normative implications of the human images that are derived from the canonical text and its interpretations are discussed in Section III. The dynamic interdependencies between the hermeneutics of the Qur'an, theological anthropology and legal philosophy particularly in the European context are a promising field of research that not only allows a deeper insight into the multiperspectivity and indexicality of theological anthropology but also has the potential to facilitate the long overdue discursive cooperation and rapprochement between Muslim and non-Muslim scholarship.
