System of the Cerebral Cortex Thomas Bär,2012-12-06 A vascular system consists of a supplying arterial and a draining venous part which are connected by a terminal vascular network The arterial segment can be characterized according to the structural features of the vessel wall However it is sometimes difficult to distinguish the capillary from the postcapillary vessels on the basis of structural features alone On the other hand physiologic qualities such as permeability can hardly be associated with an equivalent histologic pattern of the vessel wall Ilig 1961 Rhodin 1967 1968 Hauck 1971 Westergaard 1974 A definition of a vascular segment based on biologic significance should combine morphological and functional qualities of the vessel walls During the ontogeny of the mammalian organism a variety of vascular patterns e.g. distribution of arteries and veins arrangement of the capillaries has been formed typical of each organ Wolff et al 1975 Baez 1977 The capillaries connect the feeding arterioles and the collecting venules in two different ways according to the branching pattern of the terminal vessels Hauck 1975 Wolff et al 1975 The arterioles and venules are directly connected by capillary segments Consequently a terminal vessel called arteriovenous or a v capillary results or a closely meshed capillary network is developed which connects arterioles and venules by a variable number of small capillary branches arranged parallel to the preexisting a v capillary
