THE REAL THING I When the porter's wife she used to answer the house bell announced A gentleman with a lady sir I had as I often had in those days for the wish was father to the thought an immediate vision of sitters Sitters my visitors in this case proved to be but not in the sense I should have preferred However there was nothing at first to indicate that they might not have come for a portrait The gentleman a man of fifty very high and very straight with a moustache slightly grizzled and a dark grey walking coat admirably fitted both of which I noted professionally I don't mean as a barber or yet as a tailor would have struck me as a celebrity if celebrities often were striking It was a truth of which I had for some time been conscious that a figure with a good deal of frontage was as one might say almost never a public institution A glance at the lady helped to remind me of this paradoxical law she also looked too distinguished to be a personality Moreover one would scarcely come across two variations together Neither of the pair spoke immediately they only prolonged the preliminary gaze which suggested that each wished to give the other a chance They were visibly shy they stood there letting me take them in which as I afterwards perceived was the most practical thing they could have done In this way their embarrassment served their cause
