

philosophy is that interpretation is an open process which no single vision can conclude'⁴⁴ – they also will come to accept a more egalitarian tafsir and certainly one that is inclusive of women's voices.

Towards a hermeneutics of equality

What might such a tafsir entail? Even more significantly – given that the content of knowledge is never independent of the methods by which it is produced – what kind of a hermeneutic approach might generate it? Before considering Wadud's tafsir, therefore, it would be useful to examine her conceptual and methodological framework more closely.

Wadud begins her critique of traditional tafsir, as well as her own exegesis of the Qur'an, by clarifying that what 'proceeds from the text ... in the name of tafsir, is not one and the same as the divine will'.⁴⁵ This distinction between 'divine speech and its earthly realisation'⁴⁶ is an old one in Muslim theology and one that the Qur'an also makes.⁴⁷ Yet, over the course of time, Muslim interpretive communities have come to see their own tafsir hence their own interpretive authority, as being on a par with revelation. For example, the Hanafi legal school – which trains its adherents in the time-honoured method of reading "backward" through the scholarship of previous generations in an attempt to ensure "continuity with the past" – holds that 'the authority of the practice defined by later generations [is equivalent to] the authority of revelation'.⁴⁸ While equating their own authority with that of revelation allows legal and interpretive schools to claim legitimacy, it also collapses divine discourse with its human interpretations, thus permitting the displacement of biases onto the Divine. This confusion of the Qur'an with its tafsir also discourages new readings of the Qur'an since it allows interpretive communities to misrepresent critiques of tafsir as critiques of the Qur'an and to marginalise new readings in the name of adhering to a religiously sanctioned tradition. They then are able to protect not only their own hegemony, but also the hegemony of the religious knowledge (on which they draw) produced by a small number of male scholars in the early years of Islam. While not all these scholars were misogynists of course, the sexual ethos of the times in which they wrote (the Middle Ages) was, and they could not but be influenced by it to varying degrees.⁴⁹ This is why Wadud's distinction between God's Speech and human renditions of it is so crucial.

If adhering to this distinction marks Wadud as a traditionalist, it also allows her to embrace the modern hermeneutic insight that reading is subjective and incomplete, a fact Muslims overlook when it comes to traditional tafsir. This view allows her to free the Qur'an of its (anti-women) mistradings while also permitting her to argue in favour of some readings and against others. Thus, recognising the role of subjectivity in reading does not keep Wadud from arguing that some interpretations are in fact better than others. This is not a contradictory position in that the Qur'an itself recommends reading it for its best meanings (and also specifies some principles for doing so),⁵⁰ establishing both that it is open to multiple readings and that not all readings may be equally good. Hermeneutics as a discipline also rests on the premise that while 'multiple readings are not per se mutually exclusive, not all interpretations are thereby equal'.⁵¹ Belief in textual polysemy thus does not render one a moral relativist; nor does embracing monosemy (the idea that there is only one correct reading of a text) signify great virtue.

Secondly, although Wadud does not put it in these terms, she reads the Qur'an as both a 'historically situated'⁵² text and as a 'complex hermeneutic totality'.⁵³ That is, she explains the Qur'an's teachings in terms of the social and historical contexts Islam sought to reform and also in terms of the linguistic, grammatical, and syntactical structures of the text itself. Although, as noted, conservatives reject a 'historicising understanding' of the Qur'an,⁵⁴ many contemporary Muslim scholars argue in favour of it. Mahmud Mohamed Taha, for instance, held that such an approach was essential for deriving general principles from the Qur'an. The difference is that Taha held that the distinction between the universal and the particular was built into revelation itself, specifically, into its historical periodisation into two phases:

Modern Muslim Intellectuals And The Quran:

Modern Muslim Intellectuals and the Qur'an Suha Taji-Farouki, Institute of Ismaili Studies, 2006-01-26 This volume examines the writings of ten Muslim intellectuals working in the Muslim world and the West who employ contemporary critical methods to understand the Qur'an. Their work points to a new trend in Muslim interpretation characterised by a direct engagement with the Word of God while embracing intellectual modernity in a global context. The volume situates and evaluates their work and responses to it among Muslim and non-Muslim audiences. Islam in Contemporary World

Asghar Ali Engineer, 2007 This book reflects on and re-evaluates various socially relevant topics of present times by bringing out the transcendental nature of the Qur'an and relating them to the demands of the contemporary world. Written lucidly, this well-researched and informative book will be a delightful read for scholars, students of Islamic Studies, social scientists as well as lay readers. Modern Muslim Intellectuals and the Qur'an, 2006 The Rule of Law, Freedom of Expression and Islamic Law

Hossein Esmaeili, Irmgard Marboe, Javaid Rehman, 2017-12-14 The importance of the rule of law is universally recognised and of fundamental value for most societies. Establishing and promoting the rule of law in the Muslim world, particularly in the Middle East, North Africa and Central Asia, has become a pressing but complicated issue. These states have Muslim majority populations and the religion of Islam has an important role in the traditional structures of their societies. While the Muslim world is taking gradual steps towards the establishment of rule of law systems, most Muslim majority countries may not yet have effective legal systems with independent judiciaries which would allow the state and institutions to be controlled by an effective rule of law system. One important aspect of the rule of law is freedom of expression. Given the sensitivity of Muslim societies in relation to their sacred beliefs, freedom of expression as an international human rights issue has raised some controversial cases. This book, drawing on both International and Islamic Law, explores the rule of law and freedom of expression and its practical application in the Muslim world. Modern Perspectives on Islamic Law

E. Ann Black, Hossein Esmaeili, Nadirsyah Hosen, 2013-01-01 This book presents an invaluable contribution to the debate on the compatibility of Islam and modernity. It is full of arguments and examples showing how Islam can be understood in line with modern life, human rights, democracy, the rule of law, civil society and pluralism. The three authors come from different countries, represent different gender perspectives and have a Shia, a Sunni and a non-Muslim background respectively, which makes the book a unique source of information and inspiration. Irmgard Marboe, University of Vienna, Austria. This well-informed book explains, reflects on and analyses Islamic law not only in the classical legal tradition of Sharia but also its modern contemporary context. The book explores the role of Islamic law in secular Western nations and reflects on the legal system of Islam in its classical context as applied in its traditional homeland of the Middle East and also in South East Asia. Written by three leading scholars from three different backgrounds – a Muslim in the Sunni tradition, a Muslim in the Shia tradition and a non-Muslim woman – the book is not only unique but also enriched by differing insights into Islamic law. Sir

William Blair provides the foreword to a book which acknowledges that Islam continues to play a vital role not just in the Middle East but across the wider world the discussion on which the authors embark is a crucial one The book starts with an analysis of the nature of Islamic law its concepts meaning and sources as well as its development in different stages of Islamic history This is followed by accounts of how Islamic law is being practised today Key modern institutions are discussed such as the parliament judiciary dar al ifta political parties and other important organizations It continues by analysing some key concepts in our modern times nation state citizenship ummah dhimmah recognition of the status of certain non Muslims in Islamic states and the rule of law The book investigates how in recent times more and more fatwas are issued collectively rather than emanating from an individual scholar The authors then evaluate how Islamic law deals with family matters economics crime property and alternative dispute resolution Lastly the book revisits certain contemporary issues of debate in Islamic law such as the burqa halal food riba interest and apostasy

Modern Perspectives on Islamic Law will become a standard scholarly text on Islamic law Its wide ranging coverage will appeal to researchers and students of Islamic law or Islamic studies in general Legal practitioners will also be interested in the comparative aspects of Islamic law presented in this book
