

ERIKSON'S PSYCHOSOCIAL STAGES

P.1

Erik Erikson's Psychosocial Stages of development provide a framework for understanding human growth and development throughout the lifespan. These stages encompass various psychosocial challenges and conflicts that individuals encounter as they progress from infancy to old age. Let's dive into each stage:

Trust vs. Mistrust (Infancy, 0-1 year): In this stage, infants learn to trust or mistrust the world based on the consistency of their caregivers. If their needs for food, comfort, and affection are consistently met, they develop a sense of trust. However, if their needs are neglected or inconsistently met, they may develop mistrust.

Autonomy vs. Shame and Doubt (Early Childhood, 1-3 years): During this stage, children assert their independence and develop a sense of autonomy. They learn to do things on their own, such as feeding themselves and using the toilet. If caregivers provide support and encouragement, children gain confidence. However, if they face criticism or excessive control, they may develop shame and doubt.

Initiative vs. Guilt (Preschool Age, 3-6 years): In this stage, children begin to take initiative and assert themselves in various activities. They develop a sense of purpose and curiosity about the world. If caregivers encourage their exploration and support their initiatives, children develop a sense of purpose. However, if their efforts are consistently criticized or suppressed, they may experience guilt.

Industry vs. Inferiority (School Age, 6-12 years): During this stage, children engage in formal education and develop competence in various skills. They strive for achievement and recognition from teachers, peers, and parents. If their efforts are recognized and valued, they develop a sense of industry and competence. However, if they experience constant failure or lack of encouragement, they may develop feelings of inferiority.
