Participants reported the greatest teacher-to-student interaction with the school and community. The data also show participants used the information to pursue other goals. This suggests that while school may be important, it is not the dominant aspect of life. Rather, the school structure must fit the society or community.

1. The traditional curriculum does not adequately challenge the students, engaged in rote learning, memorized the curriculum, assume the role of passive recipients and provide superficial knowledge in a narrow way of learning. When asked if the new curriculum address issues of the society, different groups, part of the groups, or individuals, the study revealed a. Although this new great features curriculum was made to meet the demand for change, as answer to the previous studies that it is the curriculum, that requires complete change, it did not include content that address the social issues, particularly on the students' individual development to take about the society around. This new curriculum is designed a new curriculum that should have been addressed.
