We appreciate your support of the preservation process and thank you for being an important part of keeping this knowledge alive and relevant Killing the Market Roemer McPhee, 2016-05-14 Robert W. Wilson is the greatest investor of all time on the only criterion that counts: percentage return on capital. What you make with what you have: what you started out with. Wilson would be the first to point out that there are investors richer than himself, but on a percentage return basis, he is unmatched and untouched. He received 15,000 from his mother in 1958 and he ran this stake to the fabulous sum of 230 million by 1986. With assistance, he himself sought out; he then nearly quadrupled his net worth to 800 million by the year 2000. This return after taxes, no less, is more than 50,000 to one. More than 5,000,000 percent. Wilson did it in about forty years without partners. How? How possibly? This book, Killing the Market, tries to find or at least get close to an answer. Robert Wilson quit the investing business in 1986 because he had lost his touch, as he said. The most productive of men, the hardest working of men, he started to move into philanthropy. Eventually, he became just about the most important philanthropist in the United States. Of the 800 million he accumulated, he had given away fully 700 million of it at the time of his death in 2013 by his own hand. Movingly, Robert Wilson's gifts were never to things that entertained him or to pet projects; they were always to charities trying very hard to make the world a better place for everybody.
