Snowling, 2019-05-23 Since dyslexia was first described in the British Medical Journal in 1896 there has been debate about the definitions and diagnostic procedures used with some casting doubt on its very existence However there is now a considerable body of research regarding the nature and characteristics of this relatively common learning disorder The contemporary view of dyslexia has emerged from a century of research in medicine psychology and more recently neuroscience and we now understand enough about this learning disorder to guide policy and practice This Very Short Introduction provides an accessible overview of this exciting field of research beginning with its history and drawing on testimony from people living with dyslexia Considering the potential causes of dyslexia and looking at both genetic and environment factors Margaret Snowling shows how cross linguistic studies have documented the prevalence of dyslexia in different languages Discussing the various brain scanning techniques that have been used to find out if the brains of people with dyslexia differ in structure or function from those of typical readers Snowling moves on to weigh up various strategies and interventions which can help people living with dyslexia today ABOUT THE SERIES The Very Short Introductions series from Oxford University Press contains hundreds of titles in almost every subject area These pocket sized books are the perfect way to get ahead in a new subject quickly Our expert authors combine facts analysis perspective new ideas and enthusiasm to make interesting and challenging topics highly readable Fluency and Reading Comprehension in Typical Readers and Dyslexics Readers Simone A. Capellini, Giseli D. Germano, 2018-02-22 Reading involves decoding and comprehension components and to become efficient it requires a large number of cognitive and linguistic processes Among those the phonological awareness the alphabetic principle the decoding the fluency the lexical development and the text comprehension development The reading comprehension is strongly related with the development of vocabulary oral language linguistic skills memory skills and ability to make inferences and the world experiences of each individual These processes become important only when the professional needs to deal with students presenting difficulties in learning how to read The difficulty using the knowledge of conversion rules between grapheme and phoneme to the word reading construction characterizes the dyslexia which is a specific learning disorder with a neurological source. These difficulties presented by students with dyslexia interfere in their learning process, impairing the learning development. Knowing and following the reading development and its processes, as well as obtaining the punctuation of fluency abilities and students' comprehension, allow us to understand what happens when the student presents difficulties to read. This could help in the identification of learning disabilities and in the development of intervention programs.
