

An archaeological excavation site in an urban environment. In the foreground, there are several tiers of rough-hewn stone walls. A dirt path runs alongside the excavation. Two men are working: one in a blue patterned shirt and jeans stands looking towards the site, while another in a grey shirt and khaki pants is kneeling, operating a yellow surveying instrument. In the background, a wooden safety fence separates the site from a modern brick building with large windows. Several people are visible behind the fence, observing the work.

Archaeological Practice as Politics and Ethics John Carman, 2024-08-29 This book is of relevance to all archaeologists and all others concerned with how an interest in the past impacts on the present This book explores the manner in which archaeology as a discipline and a field of endeavour contributes to the modern world The focus throughout the book is on practices the range of different things that archaeologists do and how they do and have done it in order to explore the field as a distinctive aspect of social practice over time It also concerns the structures social political economic professional philosophical in which archaeology is performed and the consequences for the discipline and its practitioners Throughout there is a concern especially with archaeology as a field of political and ethical decision making aspects well recognised by practitioners but rarely emphasised The book both asks and answers questions about the perception of archaeology from both within and outside the field The book draws widely on previous work by the author and others looking at the techniques of the field the people involved the political and social impacts both on and by the field In doing so it seeks to bring these different perspectives together to create a more holistic idea of what archaeology is has been and could be The book is offered to those outside the field as a justification for archaeology a field coming under increasing pressure from those who consider it as so many humanities and social science disciplines as an expensive luxury

Quality Management in Archaeology Willem Willems, 2007-06-25 Quality Management in Archaeology deals with the effects of the profound changes that have had an impact on the discipline of archaeology all over the world In North America in Europe and increasingly in other parts of the world new legislation and international treaties have changed its position in society What was once a university based research activity by a limited number of academics has become a socially relevant field with many practitioners that are mostly employed in some branch of archaeological resource management Archaeology has been successful in persuading governments and the general public that more should be done to preserve archaeological heritage and to investigate it where it will be irretrievably lost The scale and frequency of archaeological work has increased vastly at considerable cost to society Consequently there is pressure to do the work efficiently and economically At the same time academic standards have to be maintained to assure that the end result will be the relevant knowledge about the past that society pays for Different countries have found different approaches and solutions to deal with this dilemma Sometimes commercial archaeology is allowed sometimes it is not but in every national context quality has to be managed in some way This book presents a survey by specialists from the US Canada and several European countries on how this is done what the principles are and also the priorities It will be useful for anyone interested in archaeological resource management
