

SUPERVISOR

VS

MANAGER

The following are the major differences between supervisor and manager:
One significant difference between the two is that supervisor looks after the daily activities of the business while a manager doesn't.

Supervisor

A supervisor is an employee and the head of the front line management who watches the employees and their activities working under him/her. He/She has the authority to delegate the task to the individual workers, approve working hours and to resolve the payroll issues.

The major responsibility of a supervisor is to look after his men that they reach the targeted production level in the stipulated time.

- ➔ To implement the policies made by the upper-level management
- ➔ To make short action plans as a stepping stone to achieve targets.
- ➔ Assigning work to workers.
- ➔ Coordinate the people at work.
- ➔ Motivating, guiding and training subordinates.
- ➔ Preparing timely reports regarding the performance of the employees.
- ➔ Listening and resolving the worker complaints and grievances.

Manager

A manager is a person who manages the resources of the organization. By resources, we mean men, money, material, method and machinery. But not only the resources, but a manager is in charge of the entire management of the organization.

In general, a manager does not do any work himself but gets it done by his subordinates. He/She is the representative of the whole department, unit or division of the second level or top level management.

There are mainly five functions of a manager, indicated below:

- Planning ←
- Organizing ←
- Staffing ←
- Motivating & Leading ←
- Controlling Coordination ←
