

party that suffered considerable hardship in the creation of Bangladesh to a party the leadership of which plundered the society in almost every way it could;

- the reasons for 'corruption and misuse of power leading to the wasting of almost 40 per cent of the total resources set apart for development' (p. 259) in spite of the fact that Bangladeshi society had the tradition of spiritual regeneration brought about by the Wahabi and Faraizi movements;
- the role that needs to be played by political parties, the government, the business leaders, the academic and religious institutions in creating a climate for rapid economic development.

Readers wanting to provide their own answers to these questions will find the book useful. The book also provides a good profile of Bangladesh society today, although needless repetition is on occasion jarring and distracting.

Rama Murthy Kuppachi, Managing by Consultation: Global and Asian Experiences, New Delhi: Sage Publications, 1992, pp. 226.

The book under review is an attempt, as claimed by the author, to provide a global view of participatory management from an Asian perspective, focusing on India and Sri Lanka. In effect, it provides a 'fast forward' glimpse of not only what is intended but also of a wide range of theoretical propositions in the field of human relations and productivity. At the end of my perusal of what Kuppachi has put together, I thought I had tasted a casually cooked menu with an international mix of dishes, none of which left a lingering, let alone lasting, effect on my academic appetite.

The book opens with a preamble designed to serve as a backdrop to labour-management participative models and practices. The content of the introductory chapter, however, does not rise above a rapid and facile summary of conceptual material on the behavioural view of the management process, especially leadership and management styles. It appears that the author, while aiming at a contribution in scholarship in participative management, could not resist the temptation to make his product attractive to students being initiated into the study of human relations in

The Big Con Mariana Mazzucato,Rosie Collington,2025-05-20 A vital and timely investigation into the opaque and powerful consulting industry and what to do about it There is an entrenched relationship between the consulting industry and the way business and government are managed today that must change Mariana Mazzucato and Rosie Collington show that our economies reliance on companies such as McKinsey Company Boston Consulting Group Bain Company PwC Deloitte KPMG and EY stunts innovation obfuscates corporate and political accountability and impedes our collective mission of halting climate breakdown The Big Con describes the confidence trick the consulting industry performs in contracts with hollowed out and risk averse governments and shareholder value maximizing firms It grew from the 1980s and 1990s in the wake of reforms by the neoliberal right and Third Way progressives and it thrives on the ills of modern capitalism from financialization and privatization to the climate crisis It is possible because of the unique power that big consultancies wield through extensive contracts and networks as advisors legitimators and outsourcers and the illusion that they are objective sources of expertise and capacity In the end the Big Con weakens our businesses infantilizes our governments and warps our economies In The Big Con Mazzucato and Collington throw back the curtain on the consulting industry They dive deep into important case studies of consultants taking the reins with disastrous results such as the debacle of the roll out of HealthCare gov and the tragic failures of governments to respond adequately to the COVID 19 pandemic The result is an important and exhilarating intellectual journey into the modern economy s beating heart With peerless scholarship and a wealth of original research Mazzucato and Collington argue brilliantly for building a new system in which public and private sectors work innovatively for the common good ICMLG 2018 6th International
