

either evolution or progression. As by one of these postulates the ethics of life are to be or are determined, it is to be said to all parties, men or spirits, concerned: "Under what flag, Reasonian?" And yet still, the most important practical question for man, at his present stage, is not so much what were either the beginnings or natures of spirit and matter, but how they now act in or upon his conduct and destiny.

If spirit is matter, sublimated or not, there is no need or use for religion or its ideas, though there may be for knowledge, if mind can be accounted for. Seu transit gloria mundi.

And why are minds and spirits so disposed to contradict each other, if both are physical? Their bodies do not do so, of themselves. Does sublimation induce discord instead of harmony? Do material bodies live, and not spirits? Do not chemical affinities or repulsions, of which very slight variations convert materials from suitable food into poison and vice versa, require a beneficent spiritual influence or psychic law, exerted by intelligence, in their adjustment? Let the spirit of Darwin rise and explain!

All the cloudy dogmatisms of earth will be in the deep bosom of a lethean ocean buried, by the more exigent inquiry: is the intellectual capacity of man matter or a higher element? His convictions upon it will determine his destiny for ages. It will affect his every thought, action and relation.

I am indebted for the following quotations, to an article entitled Darwinism and Democracy by Mr. W. S. Lilly, an able English writer, published in the English Fortnightly Review, and from it republished in the Eclectic Magazine for March instant, at New York. Mr. Lilly remarks, "It will be well, then, to note here that, as much Platonism is vulgarly current for which you will search in vain the philosopher of Academe, as the Lutheranism of the present day consists largely of opinions of which the founder of Protestantism was guiltless, so a great deal passes for Darwinism which is not to be found in the writings of Mr. Darwin. What the lifelong labors of that patient and conscientious inquirer really established, we will consider by and-by."

Mr. Darwin's problem, in brief, is: that, from the first indications of life on earth (according to geology,) vegetable or animal, and specially from the Eocene period and from the medicean stage of embryonic animalism, Nature, by a persistent system of "natural selection," producing myriads of "variations" in the material structures and forms of plants and animals, in the direction of improved capacity to endure the exigencies of life-existence on earth, established, as the usual result, the law of the "survival of the fittest," in the course of generations. And that this law has led to the present condition of vegetable and animal forms and their capabilities. He established these truths by facts; but he does not discuss or claim any spiritual development.

To recur to Mr. Lilly; he states, "A host of ardent, French, German and English, who have sought in Darwinism the key to well-nigh all the world's enigmas," embraced it at large. "Foremost among these is Professor Haeckel, whose writings have unquestionably done more than Darwin's own for the diffusion of what is generally known as Darwinism."

Of these the most notable is Haeckel's theory of abtogenesis, which amounts to this: that the organic comes out of the inorganic as its adequate cause, by a process similar to that whereby the molecules of crystalline bodies assume regular form. The general result at which he arrives is a purely physical explanation of life. The persistence of matter and energy," (which is the key word of Herbert Spencer,) "the correlation of forces, dissipation of forces, sufficiently explain for him the wondrous All." . . . Haeckel "will allow of no activities in the organism but the chemical and the mechanic!"

Haeckel says, "that the component physical parts of the protoplasm, properly united, produce the soul and body of the animated world, and suitably nursed become man. With this single argument the mystery of the universe is explained, the Deity assailed, and a new era of infinite knowledge ushered in." . . . "that life, at first generated spontaneously, has ascended from the simplest form of protoplasm to the human automaton, through the twenty-two distinct stages of evolution which the Prof. has expounded."

Mr. Lilly further states that many French philosophers and politicians urge that, "it is upon 'natural truths' that the foundation of the public order must rest. Physical science is the only true science, and its methods are the only true methods. Metaphysics and transcendentalism, and, still more, 'all religion and all religiosity' are mere shadows, serving to divert men's attention from phenomenal realities which are the only realities, and to hinder progress in the material arts of life, which is the only progress. 'La démocratie,' observes a very popular exponent of it, 'démolit Dieu, démolit tout le vieux monde, et une chose seule reste—l'évolution scientifique.' " This ignores spirit, and those tenets bring Materialism and Spiritualism, as the real gigantic antagonists, face to face in conflict over all that pertains to science, government, the religious idea, social duty, and present and future spiritual existence, responsibility and progress. And the conflict it seems is not confined to mortals. The natural religionists, the spirito-materialists, the medico-atheistic school, the politico-materialists, (who now say that "the Revolution delights in calling itself Atheistic"), the Materialists or sensés, all stand on the same basis—Matter. But the greater mass of mankind who intuitively recognize God, who are conscious of soul and spiritual thought, who feel the internal emotions of love, duty and reverence—yes, all who see Omnipotence in every phase of nature, stand on the same basis—Spirit.

Mr. Lilly, in due course, remarks: It is difficult to see why the speculations of Professors should be more binding upon our belief than the revelations of Prophets. We will turn, then, from the Darwinism of Herr Haeckel to the Darwinism of Mr. Darwin. What may the researches of that indefatigable worker be taken to have established? The supreme problem to which he addressed himself was the origin of the human race as a distinct species. I shall present his solution of that problem in his own words, taken from the summary with which he ends his book on the Descent of Man: "the main conclusion arrived at in this work, and now held by many naturalists who are well competent to form a sound judgment, is that man is descended from some less highly organized form. The grounds upon which this conclusion rests will never be shaken, for the close similarity between man and the lower animals in embryonic development, as well as innumerable points of structure and constitution, both of high and of the most trifling importance—the rudiments which he retains, and the abnormal reverberations to which he is occasionally liable—are facts which cannot be disputed. They have long been known, but until recently they told us nothing with respect to the origin of man. Now when viewed by the light of our knowledge of the whole organic world, their meaning is unmistakable. . . . By considering the embryologi-
