opportunities the Indian market is now home to several international brands which has led to the present upsurge of FDI in this very important sector of the Indian economy The book closely examines the nature and impact of such external changes on the industry s structure and labour related issues The key feature of this book is that it presents a snapshot of all the domestic and international policies related to this sector from the earliest relevant period to the present and analyses the topical issues in significant detail The book also offers some empirical analyses to show the impact of external changes on the concentration of firms in this industry and the regional inequalities that have emerged from regional variations in firms employment labour income and profit levels Further it addresses another striking feature namely the role of preferential trading blocs or Regional Trading Arrangements RTA in creating trade diverting effects related to this sector apart from the implications of foreign collaborations and cross border mergers and acquisitions Many economists fear that the benefits of these RTAs for the partner countries are much greater than those for India with net gains of incremental exports from India being small or even negative This book discusses these critical issues in the context of India s textile and apparel trade

Hoekman,Will Martin,Carlos Alberto Primo

Braga,2009-04-15 The multilateral trade system rests on the principle of nondiscrimination Unilateral trade preferences granted by developed countries can help beneficiary countries but can create tensions between preferred developing countries typically beneficiaries from pre existing colonial regimes and other developing countries There is also concern about the potential erosion of these preferences through trade liberalization in the importing countries an issue that has been important in the current negotiations under the Doha Development Agenda of the World Trade Organization Trade Preference Erosion provides the information needed to make informed assessments of the benefits of trade preferences for developing countries the risks associated with the erosion of these benefits and policy options for dealing with these problems The authors provide detailed analyses of specific preference programs and undertake cross country disaggregated analyses of the impact of preferences at the product level Understanding the likely impacts of these programs and how those impacts are distributed is a precondition for formulating appropriate policy responses The authors argue that such responses need to go beyond trade policies and need to include a focus on enhancing the competitiveness and supply side capacity of developing countries This book is a useful and informative guide for policy makers non governmental organizations and others who wish to better understand the debate on the magnitude and impact of preference erosion
