Monolingualism and Bilingualism Multilingual Matters Ltd,1995 Shifting the Burden of Bilingualism Ray Castro,1976 A Psycholinguistic Investigation of Agreement in Spanish and English Monolinguals and Bilinguals Rebecca K. Foote,2006 The two broad goals of this dissertation are to investigate cross linguistic and cross dialectal differences in monolingual agreement production as a function of the richness of morphological paradigms and to investigate how these differences may play out in bilinguals who vary in age of onset of bilingualism early vs late and proficiency level intermediate vs advanced Research questions ask 1 Are there cross linguistic differences in the production of subject verb number agreement in English Mexican Spanish and Dominican Spanish as evidenced by differing sensitivity to conceptual number 2 Are there differences in the mechanics of agreement production in monolinguals and bilinguals 3 Are there differences in how bilinguals produce agreement in each language 4 Do age of acquisition and proficiency modulate how bilinguals produce agreement

Bilingualism: A Social Approach M. Heller,2007-05-01 Arguing against a common sense view of bilingualism as the co existence of two linguistic systems this volume develops a critical perspective which approaches bilingualism as a wide variety of sets of sociolinguistic practices connected to the construction of social difference and of social inequality under specific historical conditions

"Vous Êtes Homme de Bien" Jenelle Thomas,2017 In this dissertation I use a bilingual epistolary corpus to examine the interaction of language contact language and genre specific conventions and speakers individual communicative strategies Although multilingualism was a common historical condition many traditional language histories and studies of historical speech only consider monolinguals or bilingualism as it affects a particular language rather than seeing multilingualism as part of an individual and community repertoire In contrast this study uses both quantitative and qualitative methods to examine the linguistic practices of a bilingual network of speakers in both of their languages The corpus analyzed here is a collection of private letters which I selected and transcribed from the family correspondence of Francisco Boulogny a soldier and military governor in colonial New Orleans These letters were written in both French and Spanish as the family and acquaintances corresponded between New Orleans France and Spain for a period spanning from the mid 18th to the mid 19th century I address the following research questions through case studies at three levels phonological orthographic morphosyntactic and pragmatic 1 In what way s does bilingualism affect language usage How do bilingual and monolingual usage differ 2 How does bilingualism interact with other factors such as convention genre

audience and stance and how do bilingual writers use the resources of their two languages in their production In Chapter 3 I find widespread orthographic variation conditioned by factors such as age and geographic location However I argue for the inclusion of language specific education and literacy as an additional factor in variation as I find that the written standard can obscure variation and contact effects while also serving as a resource for bilinguals when writing in a second language Chapter 4 addresses the contrast between the complex and simple past tenses in both Spanish and French As the monolingual patterns of use in each language diverge I find that bilinguals as a group do not follow monolinguals in showing an increased use of the complex past in French but not Spanish Although individual patterns vary greatly bilinguals use the French complex past overall less frequently than monolinguals arguably because of the restraining influence of Spanish contact This contact influence can be seen in discourse pragmatic uses of the two tenses used to shape the narrative or create temporal contrast In Chapter 5 I consider the construction of identity and interpersonal relationships in bilingual correspondence through choice of language forms of address and expressions of sincerity I find that speakers choose and continue to use only one language with their addressees even when both speakers are bilingual and that this choice is motivated largely by the characteristics of the addressee The choice of second person pronouns T or V patterns fairly rigidly according to language and familial relationship but I argue that speakers vary opening formulae to express more subtle distinctions in the intimacy of the relationship Some speakers similarly appeal to existing formulae to convince the addressee of their sincerity but this can be shown to be particularly true of less literate or second language speakers while other speakers eschew explicit mentions of sincerity for other strategies Overall although speakers show awareness of epistolary norms in each language and in many ways adhere to language specific practices they also manipulate these conventions in meaningful ways This study is the first to delve into issues of historical bilingualism through a balanced bilingual epistolary corpus and one of few to explore language use in Spanish Louisiana I find that individual speakers show evidence of using resources from their bilingual repertoire to aid in composition and construction of meaning in various ways This is particularly true of loci of variation in the individual language systems or structures that share typological similarities across the systems However at the community level the variety of individual patterns and the force of the monolingual norms and written formulae appear to inhibit the spread of change I underscore the importance in future studies of considering a speaker's and community's language use in its entire context including other languages literacies and considerations of genre as we explore how speakers use the available resources for interpersonal communication and how that translates to the community level

Bilingualism Peter A. Hornby, 1977 Bilingualism and Language Contact Florence Barkin, Elizabeth Brandt, Jacob Ornstein-Galicia, 1982-01-01 "Vous Êtes Homme de Bien" Jenelle Katherine Thomas, 2018

In this dissertation I use a bilingual epistolary corpus to examine the interaction of language contact language and genre specific conventions and speakers individual communicative strategies Although multilingualism was a common

historical condition many traditional language histories and studies of historical speech only consider monolinguals or bilingualism as it affects a particular language rather than seeing multilingualism as part of an individual and community repertoire In contrast this study uses both quantitative and qualitative methods to examine the linguistic practices of a bilingual network of speakers in both of their languages The corpus analyzed here is a collection of private letters which I selected and transcribed from the family correspondence of Francisco Boulogny a soldier and military governor in colonial New Orleans These letters were written in both French and Spanish as the family and acquaintances corresponded between New Orleans France and Spain for a period spanning from the mid 18th to the mid 19th century I address the following research questions through case studies at three levels phonological orthographic morphosyntactic and pragmatic 1 In what way s does bilingualism affect language usage How do bilingual and monolingual usage differ 2 How does bilingualism interact with other factors such as convention genre audience and stance and how do bilingual writers use the resources of their two languages in their production In Chapter 3 I find widespread orthographic variation conditioned by factors such as age and geographic location However I argue for the inclusion of language specific education and literacy as an additional factor in variation as I find that the written standard can obscure variation and contact effects while also serving as a resource for bilinguals when writing in a second language Chapter 4 addresses the contrast between the complex and simple past tenses in both Spanish and French As the monolingual patterns of use in each language diverge I find that bilinguals as a group do not follow monolinguals in showing an increased use of the complex past in French but not Spanish Although individual patterns vary greatly bilinguals use the French complex past overall less frequently than monolinguals arguably because of the restraining influence of Spanish contact This contact influence can be seen in discourse pragmatic uses of the two tenses used to shape the narrative or create temporal contrast In Chapter 5 I consider the construction of identity and interpersonal relationships in bilingual correspondence through choice of language forms of address and expressions of sincerity I find that speakers choose and continue to use only one language with their addressees even when both speakers are bilingual and that this choice is motivated largely by the characteristics of the addressee The choice of second person pronouns T or V patterns fairly rigidly according to language and familial relationship but I argue that speakers vary opening formulae to express more subtle distinctions in the intimacy of the relationship Some speakers similarly appeal to existing formulae to convince the addressee of their sincerity but this can be shown to be particularly true of less literate or second language speakers while other speakers eschew explicit mentions of sincerity for other strategies Overall although speakers show awareness of epistolary norms in each language and in many ways adhere to language specific practices they also manipulate these conventions in meaningful ways This study is the first to delve into issues of historical bilingualism through a balanced bilingual epistolary corpus and one of few to explore language use in Spanish Louisiana I find that individual speakers show evidence of using resources from their bilingual repertoire to aid in composition and construction of meaning in various ways This is particularly true of loci of variation in the individual language systems or structures that share typological similarities across the systems However at the community level the variety of individual patterns and the force of the monolingual norms and written formulae appear to inhibit the spread of change I underscore the importance in future studies of considering a speaker's and community's language use in its entire context including other languages literacies and considerations of genre as we explore how speakers use the available resources for interpersonal communication and how that translates to the community level

Selves in Two Languages Michèle Koven, 2007-09-07 Bilinguals often report that they feel like a different person in their two languages In the words of one bilingual in Koven's book When I speak Portuguese automatically I'm in a different world it's a different color Although testimonials like this abound in everyday conversation among bilinguals there has been scant systematic investigation of this intriguing phenomenon Focusing on French Portuguese bilinguals the adult children of Portuguese migrants in France this book provides an empirically grounded theoretical account of how the same speakers enact experience and are perceived by others to have different identities in their two languages This book explores bilinguals' experiences and expressions of identity in multicultural multilingual contexts It is distinctive in its integration of multiple levels of analysis to address the relationships between language and identity Koven links detailed attention to discourse form to participants' multiple interpretations how such forms become signs of identity and to the broader macrosociolinguistic contexts that structure participants' access to those signs The study of how bilinguals perform and experience different identities in their two languages sheds light on the more general role of linguistic and cultural forms in local experiences and expressions of identity
