Monsieur Maurice Amelia B. Edwards, 2014-05-22

The events I am about to relate took place more than fifty years ago. I am a white-haired old woman now, and I was then a little girl, scarce ten years of age, but those times and the places and people associated with them seem in truth to lie nearer my memory than the times and people of to-day. Trivial incidents which if they had happened yesterday would be forgotten come back upon me sometimes with all the vivid detail of a photograph and words unheeded many a year ago start out like the handwriting on the wall in sudden characters of fire. But this is no new experience. As age creeps on, we all have the same tale to tell. The days of our youth are those we remember best and most fondly, and even the sorrows of that bygone time become pleasures in the retrospect. Of my own solitary childhood I retain the keenest recollection, as the following pages will show.
