Radiolabeled Monoclonal Antibodies for Imaging and Therapy Suresh C. Srivastava, 2013-03-14 The advent of hybridoma technology leading to the successful production of monoclonal antibodies against a variety of tumor associated antigens has during the last decade provided a very powerful tool for research and clinical investigations These highly specific reagents have essentially replaced the polysera of the earlier days The successful demonstration of the many wide ranging capabilities of the monoclonal antibody technique has already begun to exert an enormous impact on diverse areas of research in basic science and medicine In particular the potential of monoclonal antibodies to serve as carriers for selective targeting of radionuclides to tumors for diagnosis or therapy has stimulated an intense surge of research interest and even revived hopes of realizing Ehrlich's concept of the magic bullet Indeed the technology appears to be on the threshold of a revolution in diagnosing and treating malignant disease Much work remains to be done however and even though the progress has been impressive results to date have shown only moderate success There is no question that the limited success we have achieved thus far is merely a prelude to the many more exciting developments yet to come

Animal Biotechnology L.A. Babiuk, J.P. Phillips, Murray Moo-Young, 2013-10-22 The advent of biotechnology has the potential to develop a variety of novel or better quality products for the treatment of a large number of diseases in livestock In addition as we understand more about the reproductive physiology of animals the potential exists to dramatically increase the productivity of animals through better therapeutics and diagnostics for the control of many infectious diseases Productivity can also be increased through animal breeding strategies including gene transfer micromanipulation of embryos and gamete sex selection As well as being a valuable reference to current knowledge in these areas this first supplement to Comprehensive Biotechnology also looks at societal concerns over the use of antibiotics and chemical residues in meat and milk products which are forcing biotechnologists to investigate more natural means of controlling infection by stimulating the animal's own immune system to combat infection The identification of a variety of cytokines which are involved in regulating immune responses provides opportunities to use the animal's natural defence mechanisms to combat many infections or increase the animal's resistance to such infections These approaches should provide tools for eventual elimination of specific diseases from counties regions or whole continents

The Complement System Klaus Rother, Gerd O. Till, 2012-12-06 Upon contemplating an updated version of the 1974 edition of this book and envisioning its possible organization it immediately became evident that the new version could no longer be written by one two or even three authors The field has experienced an explosive expansion in various directions and the wealth of newer data which has been accumulated over the last decade can hardly be presented by a single author in a critical and coherent manner On the other hand it appears worthwhile not to abandon the attempt to come forward with a review which describes as comprehensively as possible the progress and the state of knowledge It is the aim of this volume to present a general and comprehensive review on complement It is intended not only for individuals working in this area but also for those who are less familiar with the field Several chapters in the book describe state of the art experimental methods which are helpful to critically evaluate the experimental data Simultaneously they may provide the necessary technical tools for those who wish to enter this highly provocative and exciting field

Human Malignancies D. Drahovsky, B. Kornhuber, 2012-12-06 To scientists oncology means research on the disease of cancer The connection between basic research and clinical oncology however is not always very clear Basic research sometimes appears to be an art that is practiced for its own sake and admired for its perfection The clinician wishes to interpret the issues addressed by basic research as he is eager to obtain answers to the questions that clinical oncology leaves open These are among others questions as to the etiology and pathogenesis of neoplasia in human beings In spite of all the technological advances during the past 10 years the guidelines for new treatments of human leukemias and tumors are still unsatisfactory The dialogue between researchers and clinicians must never cease so that these questions can be formulated in such a way that science may be able to answer them Both parties should cooperate whenever this is useful and possible Prospectively planned clinical trials on the diagnosis and therapy of neoplasias offer a good opportunity for research involving patients Tumor and or blood tests run by reference laboratories on a great number of patients with the same diagnosis can lead to clinically relevant basic
