Designing integrated interventions to improve nutrition and WASH behaviors in Kenya

Kimberly R. Jacob Arriola^{1*} , Anna Ellis², Amy Webb-Girard³, Emily Awino Ogutu², Emilie McClintic², Bethany Caruso² and Matthew C. Freeman²

Abstract

Background: Child stunting, an indicator of chronic malnutrition, is a global public health problem. Malnutrition during pregnancy and the first 2 years of life undermines the survival, growth, and development of children. Exposure to fecal pathogens vis-à-vis inadequate water, sanitation, and hygiene (WASH) has been implicated in the etiology of child stunting, highlighting the need to integrate WASH with nutrition-sensitive interventions to comprehensively address this complex problem. The aim of this study was to describe a systematic, theoretically informed approach (that drew from the Star and Fornoff approach to the Theory of Change development and the Behavior Change Wheel approach) to design a multi-component and integrated social and behavior change intervention to improve WASH and nutrition-related behaviors in western Kenya.

Methods: This intervention was developed to be integrated into an existing project that utilized the care group model and aimed to create a culture of care and support for HIV/AIDS-affected children under two and their caregivers and was executed by local partners. We tested the newly created intervention packages in user-testing trials using an adapted Trials of Improved Practices approach to pilot acceptability and feasibility.

Results: Using authentic stakeholder engagement and relevant theories, we conducted an 8-step process: (1) conduct mixed methods formative research, (2) prioritize target behaviors, (3) use causal analysis to create problem trees, (4) develop solution trees and articulate assumptions and rationales for change, (5) link solution trees to intervention functions, (6) develop the intervention plan, (7) create the intervention packages, and (8) test and refine the intervention packages.

Conclusions: This study highlights the need to take a multi-sectorial, integrated approach that integrates contextually relevant behavior change theories with the experiential knowledge gleaned from stakeholders into the design of interventions that seek to reduce child stunting. This process resulted in the creation of intervention packages that grouped behaviors thematically to be most relevant and responsive to the population context. This work has the potential to make important contributions towards achievement of the United Nations' sustainable development goals.

Evaluation of Nutrition Interventions Ann Burgess, 1982-01-01 Integrating Health, Nutrition, and Family Planning Programs Judith B. Balderston, 1989 Project Poshak, 1975 Nutrition Intervention Strategies in National Development Barbara Underwood, 2012-12-02 Nutrition Intervention Strategies in National Development reviews nutritional programs as key components of policy planning for national development in general and health programs in particular. It summarizes research on targeted application of nutrition knowledge in public health and efforts to reduce worldwide malnutrition and it highlights the importance of planned controlled change in the quality of diet as a preventive strategy against widespread disease. Organized into seven sections encompassing 33 chapters, this volume begins with an overview of the basic concepts of nutrition intervention and some elements of successful nutrition intervention strategies. It then discusses the economic effects of early malnutrition and economic considerations for nutrition intervention programs, the role of the government in income distribution and nutritional improvement, supplementary feeding programs and strategies for addressing protein energy malnutrition. The reader is also introduced to the nutrition infection cycle in relation to intervention techniques, nutrient specific interventions including prevention of iron deficiency and nutrition education. Scientists, nutritionists, policymakers, medical doctors, economists, education specialists and health workers concerned with nutrition intervention programs will find this book extremely helpful. Galler, 2013-06-29 After the appearance of the four book series Human Nutrition: A Comprehensive Treatise, it became apparent to the editors that an important area of nutrition had been overlooked, namely behavioral aspects of nutrition. There are two areas in which nutrition and behavior interact. On the one hand, malnutrition may play a major role in determining behavior; alternatively, often aspects of behavior influence the eating habits of populations and individuals and thus affect their nutritional status. Volume 5 of this series speaks eloquently to both features of this important topic. Various aspects of the influence of behavior modification and nutrition have been explored by a number of qualified investigators. It is hoped that this volume will prove a valuable addition to the subjects covered in the other volumes. Roslyn B.
