

Conclusion

PR is indeed a form of persuasive communication. However the difference between persuasive communication and propaganda is the intent of the person who creates the message. Both communicative processes seek symbolic control over environments. However the hostility that exists between the two communications processes lies with its manipulative aim (McDonnell, 2000). A view echoed by Lowett and O'Donnell (1999) in suggesting propaganda is distinguished by its purpose; to benefit the propagandist. The inference is that an ethical communicator who avoids propaganda must avoid communication, the sole or main intent of which is to manipulate the behaviour of others to benefit the communicator's cause. This essay has demonstrated that persuasion can be but is by no means necessarily propaganda. Nor is it necessarily ethical or unethical since this should be assessed in relation to the context in which it is being practiced. The main determinant of persuasive communication as ethical PR practice is in meeting the public interest. However, the concept of the public interest has been found to be elusive as there is no universal definition of what that entails; thus it is incapable of guiding the everyday reality of persuasion in PR practice.

Public Relations Ethics and Professionalism Johanna Fawkes, 2014-08-01 Do professions really place duty to society above clients or their own interests If not how can they be trusted While some public relations PR scholars claim that PR serves society and enhances the democratic process others suggest that it is little more than propaganda serving the interests of global corporations This is not an argument about definitions but about ethics yet this topic is barely explored in texts and theories that seek to explain PR and its function in society This book places PR ethics in the wider context of professional ethics and the sociology of professions By bringing together literature from fields beyond public relations sociology professional and philosophical ethics and Jungian psychology it integrates a new body of ideas into the debate The unprecedented introduction of Jungian psychology to public relations scholarship shifts the debate beyond a traditional Western Good Bad ethical dichotomy towards a new holistic approach with dynamic implications for theory and practice This thought provoking book will be essential reading for students academics and professionals with an interest in public relations ethics and professionalism Jacques Ellul on Violence, Resistance, and War Jeffrey M.
