River Administration and Institutional Aspects in Japan Hideaki Kawasaki, 1993 The river administration in Japan is pertained by complicated legal system but it is easier to grasp River Law as the central axis Many relevant laws start from the River Law and end with the River law which is the legal foundation of Japan's river administration The basic concept of the River Law fully revised in 1964 is that every river and its water is property for public use Rivers are therefore systematically and comprehensively administrated in every basin by the river administrator

Flood Prevention and Remediation Flávio César Borba Mascarenhas, 2011 Human settlements have grown near watercourses since ancient times Water supply irrigation navigation wastewater conveyance and city defense are some of the uses that were responsible for this choice Even floods played an important role favoring the soil fertilization Man made actions however especially in urban watersheds significantly modify the natural water cycle increasing the magnitude of floods and their potential damages Consequently flood damages are one of the most important issues to be dealt with in the present days Several different studies show that floods are one of the most important natural hazards with several losses both in terms of lives and money Particularly in urban areas the amplification of floods may cause important economic losses and lead to critical social risks to the cities and their population when inundation reaches the built environment This situation is becoming more frequent each day Recent history shows that urbanization is an inevitable trend and today the most part of the world population lives in cities It is difficult however to adequately manage urban flood problems because flood risk and flood costs are not easy to quantify Traditionally flood risk and flood cost assessments face difficulties due to the subjective nature of these evaluations and to the inexistence of standardized methodologies This book tries to show different techniques and approaches to help in treating flood problems Chapters 1 and 2 show simplified mathematical modeling of floods and results of multifunctional landscape flood control measures in the city of Rio de Janeiro The remaining book chapters present remedial works against debris after floods in Venezuela and Measures for Mitigation of Flood areas in Japan There are also presented studies related with Flood Risk Assessment and Management in Mediterranean Basins The final chapter shows an interesting study related to the attitudes of residents in the Tokyo Bay area toward flood hazards

Public Spheres, Private Lives in Modern Japan, 1600-1950 Gail Bernstein, Andrew Gordon, Kate Wildman Nakai, 2020-03-17 The eleven chapters in this volume explore the process of carving out in discourse and in practice the boundaries delineating the state the civil sphere and the family in Japan from 1600 to 1950 One of the central themes in the volume is the demarcation of relations between the central political authorities and local communities The early modern period in Japan is marked by a growing sense of a unified national society with a long common history that existed in a coherent space The growth of this national community inevitably raised questions about relationships between the imperial government and local groups and interests at the prefectural and village levels Moves to demarcate divisions between central and local rule in the course of constructing a modern nation contributed to a public discourse that drew on longstanding assumptions about political legitimacy authority and responsibility as well as on Western political ideas

Water Security at Risk in Australia, China and Japan Peter J Crawford,2024-03-01 Peter Crawford is well known in Australia and internationally for his leadership in reforming governmental organisations and institutions notably in environmental and water domains In recent years he has focused on the role of political ideas and influence on national approaches to water management and water security He is now one of the few international experts who is both formally qualified and sufficiently experienced to write a book exploring the way politics and public policy formulation currently interact with science social science and multiple interests in shaping national water security In studying water security in Australia China and Japan Dr Crawford has shown that despite the great difference between the political ideologies of the three nations the exercise of political power has frequently had similar adverse impacts on national water security outcomes especially when independent evidence backed advice has been ignored Equally the way each nation has modified major river systems by giving priority to economic development has frequently compromised current and future efforts to achieve the sustainability of these systems and their potential to contribute positively to national water security It becomes clear as the book progresses that deterioration in national water security not only threatens human and environmental welfare but if unchecked could undermine future national welfare and prosperity in each nation Yet none of the three states under review has assigned water security the priority it deserves nor developed a national strategy to advance future water security Other states could well benefit from analysis of this kind by assessing the extent to which current policies and measures are impacting on national water security followed by formulation of a strategy explicitly designed to improve future prospects

Japan's Beach Erosion Takaaki Uda, 2010 Beaches in Japan have been eroding since the 1970s as a result of the artificial land alterations Approximately 3000 fishing ports and 1000 commercial ports have been built nationwide as well as 2532 large dams being constructed in the upstream basins of large rivers Due to the port and dam developments fluvial sand supply has significantly reduced resulting in shoreline recession around the river mouths Continuous sand supply along the coastline has also been obstructed by the port breakwaters The formation of wave shelter zone by the port breakwaters induce longshore sand transport thereby leading to an accretion of large amount of sand in the wave shelter zone and erosion in the surrounding area Thus almost all causes of the beach erosion in Japan are due to anthropogenic factors The exact situation of the beach erosion has never been clear in literatures that are written in Japanese or in English Coastal engineers can and should learn from these results otherwise the same situation and problems which were induced by excessive coastal development without protection measures and due attention given to nearby coasts will recur throughout the world Textbooks on coastal engineering that were already published describe only the theoretical fundamentals of the subject but lack the practical perspectives and field studies The book examines many coastal areas as examples highlighting the various erosion factors which should be avoided elsewhere globally This book was first published in Japanese in 2004 and was translated into English by the present author
