

Exploited Fish Population dynamics

An exploited fish population is effected by the same population dynamics processes, but additionally, by fishing mortality also.

Stock assessment must take into account the interaction between all four processes when providing advice to managers and politicians in relation to F, as in general, changes in populations over time are likely to be influenced by both fishing and by environment/other factors impacts on RECRUITMENT, GROWTH and NATURAL MORTALITY! (e.g R and BET)

It is the job of stock assessment to tease apart the respective influences of fishing, recruitment, growth and natural mortality to enable appropriate management responses to changes in population size and status.

***A population's response to its environment may in fact be changed by the impacts of fishing so the two processes are interrelated
