ALLIGATOR OR CROCODILE?

The easiest way to identify alligators from crocodiles is by the shape of their snouts. Alligators generally have wider heads with U-shaped snouts. Crocodiles tend to have narrower heads with V-shaped snouts. However, with more than 20 species in the order Crocodylia, this rule cannot always be applied successfully. The real answer lies in the details.

When an alligator's mouth is closed, its lower teeth are hidden. In a crocodile's mouth there is a third-tooth fourth tooth that sticks out of its closed jaws. Both species have small sensory bumps around each eye that help them locate prey through pressure changes in the water. Crocodiles have similar bumps on the scales all over their bodies.

There are other differences, including the crocodile's ability to better tolerate salt water, its higher level of aggression, and its slightly lighter color. Finally, alligators are only found in the wild in the US and China, crocodiles live all over the world.
