

ARISTOTLE'S THE DOCTRINE OF MEAN

- Discovering the true nature of the world by use of reason alone
- He adopted a scientific/empirical approach to ethical problems
- The good life is a life of happiness
- "Happiness is an activity of the soul in accord with perfect virtue." (Not the goal but the process.)
- For example: The good life for people is happiness therefore people ought to behave so as to achieve happiness and the way to do this is the "Golden Mean."
- The Golden Mean can be condensed as follows:
"In order to achieve happiness, people must act moderately, they must act so as to be striving for the mean between two extremes."

How much food should one person eat?—depends on sort of work, size.

Ascertained by trial and error.

What is good for one person may not be good for another, and one cannot tell prior to actual experimentation.
