Discussion: This is a large study with a high level of internal validity. The authors used a randomised controlled trial design, which is the gold standard for clinical research. The study was conducted in a real-world setting, which adds to its external validity. The results show that the intervention group had a significantly higher rate of adherence to the treatment regimen compared to the control group. This suggests that the intervention was effective in improving adherence. The authors also found that the intervention group had a significantly higher rate of completion of the treatment course compared to the control group. This suggests that the intervention was effective in improving completion. The authors conclude that the intervention was effective in improving adherence and completion. This study has several limitations. First, the study was conducted in a single centre, which may limit its generalisability. Second, the study did not measure the long-term outcomes of the intervention. Third, the study did not measure the cost-effectiveness of the intervention. Despite these limitations, this study provides valuable information about the effectiveness of the intervention in improving adherence and completion.
