Competition and Coexistence Ulrich Sommer,Boris Worm,2012-12-06 The question Why are there so many species has puzzled ecologist for a long time Initially an academic question it has gained practical interest by the recent awareness of global biodiversity loss Species diversity in local ecosystems has always been discussed in relation to the problem of competitive exclusion and the apparent contradiction between the competitive exclusion principle and the overwhelming richness of species found in nature Competition as a mechanism structuring ecological communities has never been uncontroversial Not only its importance but even its existence have been debated On the one extreme some ecologists have taken competition for granted and have used it as an explanation by default if the distribution of a species was more restricted than could be explained by physiology and dispersal history For decades competition has been a core mechanism behind popular concepts like ecological niche succession limiting similarity and character displacement among others For some competition has almost become synonymous with the Darwinian struggle for existence although simple plausibility should tell us that organisms have to struggle against much more than competitors e g predators parasites pathogens and environmental harshness
